Kobrand Teams with AFD to aid scholarship program

Kobrand Corporation has once again partnered with Associated Food Dealers of Michigan to benefit the AFD Foundation, Inc. Scholarship Program.

For every case of Alize product (Cognac VS, Cognac VSOP, Gold and Red Passion) sold in Michigan between May 1, 2001 and July 31, 2001, Kobrand will make a donation to the AFD Foundation Scholarship Fund.

To help retailers, Alize has created several items to encourage sales and displays including posters, casecards, table tents and shelf talkers for both on- and off-premise locations.

EBT comes to Southeast Michigan

Over the next two months Southeastern Michigan retailers who formerly took paper food stamps will be converted to using the new "Bridge Card". The Bridge Card is much like a debit card or credit card using your Third Party Processors' credit/debit machines or state supplied equipment.

If you will be processing through a Third Party Processor, the only action required is completion of the Retail Site Survey sent to you by Citicorp Service (Michigan's contractor). Make sure to contact your processor to inform them that you want to accept the Bridge Card. Those retailers using their existing equipment will be charged transaction fees.

Do tax credit enticements do more harm than good?

by Joe Sarafa
AFD President

State bureaucrats try to forecast which businesses will succeed in the marketplace and create new jobs. But they can’t possibly predict how millions of individual consumer decisions will ultimately determine the fate of a firm.

The Michigan Economic Growth Authority (MEGA), is an agency created by the Engler administration in 1995 to “encourage economic development.” Part of the Michigan Economic Development Corporation, MEGA singulates out firms to shower them with special tax credits, job training subsidies and other incentives. MEGA officials try to predict which companies that apply for tax credits will succeed and hand out special favors to certain businesses and not to others.

As of November 2000, MEGA had approved 100 deals worth more than $1.4 billion to companies that expand or relocate in Michigan. In many cases, MEGA officials can’t prove that the companies would not have expanded or relocated here without the incentives, and it appears that often the favors simply benefit one firm at the expense of other firms.

A good example of a poor choice to receive special consideration is Webvan Group, Inc. of Foster City, California. Webvan, an on-line grocery retailer, was offered $23.4 million in tax credits by MEGA on Dec. 21, 1999 in exchange for the company’s promise to build one of its 26 warehouse distribution centers in Michigan. The company’s stock finished that week at $18.38 per share.

Webvan’s stock began a steady descent almost immediately following the MEGA agreement, reaching a low of $0.47 per share on Dec. 15, 2000. According to Security and Exchange Commission filings, Webvan officials dumped almost 2 million shares of their own stock between Feb. 1 and Oct. 30, 2000. The company withdrew its promise to build a distribution center in Michigan forfeiting the MEGA tax credits.

MEGA was unable to predict Webvan’s difficulties yet they issue reports with forecasts of how many jobs will be created by tax credits, even 20 years into the future.

More importantly, MEGA did not take into consideration the economic hardship that Webvan could have caused for existing Michigan retailers. In a fixed marketplace, such as the retail grocery business, adding another player doesn’t bring additional revenue to our state; it simply redistributes it among more players.

We’re not sure that this is an appropriate role for government to take. What do you think?

Representative Valde Garcia moves to the Senate

by Kathy Blake

Former State Representative Valde Garcia (R-86) of Clinton and eastern Ionia counties, was elected March 20 in a special election to replace State Senator Harmon Cropsey, who left the position after being elected U.S. Representative.

Garcia had worked in Roger’s 26th district state senate office as chief of staff in 1995 and will finish the senator’s term which expires January 1, 2003.

When Garcia was elected as state representative in 1998, he was one of the first two Hispanics voted to the Michigan legislature. He chaired the Economic Development committee which worked on creating more incentives for Brownfield Redevelopment of contaminated unused land. The bill passed, affecting more than 80 communities. Garcia estimates, “The $90 million provided by the state in tax credits created $900 million in economic development.”

Also important to economic development, is filling the shortage of well-educated and trained employers in the workforce. Garcia has made work-force development a top priority and was instrumental in passing legislation to continue the School-To-Registered Apprenticeship Program. The program provides students with a paid opportunity to acquire a range of nationally-recognized skills and credentials through daily-on-the-job training and related classroom instruction. Employers benefit with tax credits and better trained workforce recruits.

In his second term as state representative, Garcia was assigned to the House Standing Committees on Transportation, Finance and Insurance, Commerce and Conservation.

The Transportation committee has been embroiled in setting up a new funding formula for roads. There will be committee hearings next, says Garcia.

On the Finance and Insurance committee, Garcia was instrumental in a bill that raises the automobile insurance claims threshold from 250,000 to 500,000. The Commerce committee recently heard a presentation from the office of E-Michigan which has been working on consolidating Michigan department websites. “We want to make sure all departments are speaking the same language and can talk to each other,” explains Garcia.

Garcia pledged to donate a portion of his pay to charity when the State Senate raised legislator wages. He encouraged his colleagues to do the same. He is donating his increase to the 20-25 charities that he contributes to throughout the year.

He is not only charitable with his pay increases, he also gives his time to the community by reading at the elementary schools and volunteering for the Rotary Club and the American Legion.

The newly-elected state senator pursued his interest in politics right out of high school by volunteering for Alan Cropsey’s campaign for State Representative. Garcia graduated from Lansing Christian School in 1977. He attended Cedarville College in Ohio, where he earned a bachelor’s degree in political science and history.

He joined the United States Army while in college under the ROTC program and will complete his 20th year in the military this summer. He served 9 years of active duty rising through the ranks to captain. He then joined the Army Reserves. He currently holds the rank of lieutenant colonel and serves in the Michigan National Guard.

After finishing his active duty, Garcia returned to Clinton County and went to work as a legislative aide for State Senator Harmon Cropsey. “I worked for Harmon Cropsey by day and by night I campaigned for his son, Alan Cropsey for U.S. Congress.

Garcia also served as chief of staff for the late State Senator Doug Carl before going to Mike Rogers’ office. Garcia was elected in 1994 to the Ovid Village Council and served as chair of its public works committee. He taught economics, history and government at Laingsburg Christian School and in 1997, he became a territory manager for the National Federation of Independent Businesses. With this position, he renewed memberships and surveyed members throughout Michigan. “The three most pressing problems that members reported were: a shortage of trained workers with good work ethics, too many taxes and too many regulations,” Garcia summarized. “Now when I look at a bill, I consider how this is going to affect the small business owner or retailer,” adds Garcia.

He holds a 95 percent voting record with the Small Business Association of Michigan. He received a Michigan Chamber Endorsement in 2001.

The senator lives in St. Johns with his wife and two teenage children. For fun, they occasionally travel to warm sunny beaches. His wife also works in the political arena as legislative aide to former State Representative Terry Geiger and now Rep. Gary Newell.

To reach Senator Garcia, call him at (517) 373-2420, email vgarcia@senate.mi.us, or write The Honorable Valde Garcia, State Senator, P.O. Box 30036, Lansing, MI 48909-7514.

Students, schools hooked on junk food
The Washington Post highlights how students and schools are hooked on junk food for two different reasons: Students are simply junk food junkies, while schools are hooked on signing contracts with soda and candy vendors that contribute to school revenue. According to parents and health advocates, the biggest concern is health risks students are exposed to by a system giving schools a financial interest in selling junk food.

The USDA has ordered seed dealers to find how much of the nation’s seed corn is contaminated with the StarLink protein to determine how much must be destroyed before spring planting.

According to industry representatives, it is very likely for corn seeds to contain the protein because pollen from the genetically modified crop can be carried by the wind and cross-bred with conventional varieties. The New York Times

Hog farmers squeal over USDA-NPPC deal
Independent hog farmers said Friday they plan to challenge in federal court the USDA’s agreement to continue the “Other White Meat” pork promotion.

The USDA announced last week it had reached an agreement with the National Pork Producers Council (NPPC) to continue the program, under which hog farmers pay into a fund for the promotion of pork. Hog farmers had voted down the program in a recent referendum vote, but pork processors challenged the vote as unfair and procedurally flawed. The USDA announced last week it would reverse its decision to honor the hog farmers’ vote.

Farmers contend their “check-off” funds go to support the NPPC, which ultimately represents the more powerful pork processors.

Kmart Corp. reported a 39.6 percent drop in profit in the fourth quarter, just narrowly beating Wall Street expectations. The discount retailer earned $249 million, or 48 cents per share, in the quarter ended Jan. 31, compared to $412 million, or 77 cents per share, a year ago. Revenues increased to $11.54 billion from $11.10 billion, while same-store sales declined 2.1 percent. Kmart took hits in its earnings primarily from increased competition and its decision to close 72 stores in the second quarter, according to the Associated Press.

The Knowlton family makes ice history at Party Time Ice

Mickey recalls that he got into the ice business at the right time. “Trailers and R.V.s were becoming popular and packaged ice began to grow,”

The company grew from humble beginnings, in Mickey Knowlton’s garage, to a large warehouse in Port Huron with clients throughout the entire state of Michigan.

Mickey was a Twin Pines milk man from 1955 until he sold his route in 1975. Over the years the home delivery milk business waned and Mickey investigated several business ideas. By chance, a friend with a fuel and ice delivery route offered Mickey two iceboxes, as he wanted to get out of the ice delivery business. Mickey bought them and put them in his garage.

Mickey’s son, Chuck Knowlton returned home from the Navy in 1968 and noticed his Dad in the garage scooping the ice into paper bags. His father’s little side-line ice business was catching on. Dad began selling more ice and less milk.

Chuck was able to make a living while running the milk distributorship.

As the temperature rises and Michigan’s winter finally melts away, Party Time Ice Co. of Port Huron will be filling its warehouse with giant stacks of bagged ice preparing for warmer weather. The company delivers up to 75 percent of its product during the summer season.

Early in February, Party Time’s Port Huron headquarters plant was busy freezing 8,000 pounds of ice an hour, which maximizes up to 10,000 pounds per hour during the summer months. Party Time produces 1,100 tons per day in three plants statewide.

continually reinvesting in the growing ice business. Through the years the Knowltons began purchasing other ice companies; 40 in total. Today Party Time Ice covers the entire state and is the largest Michigan ice company.

Two ice-making plants, Northern Pure Ice Co. of Grayling and Wonderland Ice Co. of Belding (Grand Rapids) both fall under the Party Time umbrella. Eleven thousand tons of ice per day are shipped from the Port Huron plant and these two locations to statewide distributorships and then are routed to retailers. During the storage phase two semis a day leave Port Huron to add to the supply at the distributorships.

Chuck’s son Steve is a third generation Knowlton and distributes ice from the Ann Arbor area.

No longer can Party Time Ice be called a Mom and Pop ice business like the one Mickey started, but it still is a family business and boasts an employee roster of long-timers.

Chuck Knowlton currently heads operations at Party Time Ice and is also the chairman of the International Packaged Ice Association (IPIA). As a major ice producer he is a leader with a lot of knowledge to share while as the head of a family ice business he can readily relate to the issues of mom & pop ice producers. From the Great Lakes Regional Ice Association to the National organization, Chuck heads up the IPIA’s 200 plus members. He became head of the association in November and has a demanding travel schedule. The IPIA includes members in Australia, Mexico, Puerto Rico, Canada and England. Industry issues include OSHA, workers comp, DOT, trucking, sanitation and electricity. The industry is self-regulating and through its association promotes packaged ice quality control standards (PIQCS). Its purpose is to regulate sanitary operations throughout the ice making process.

With the highest EPA drinking water standards and constant bacteriological testing, Party Time Ice can assure end-users of a wholesome product, manufactured to strict FDA guidelines. Store owners can rest assured that they are offering the best possible ice to their customers.

"Customers don’t come to a store looking for a particular brand of ice," says Chuck, “but if they come to your store to buy other things and need ice, and don’t find it, they will go elsewhere. As long as customers don’t feel gouged by the price, you can sell it at a profit and it can drive sales.”

When Chuck travels for IPIA he takes his wife, Vicky, who is active in the business. Other Knowlton family members take over the day-to-day operations of the business. Mickey still works fairly long hours, although he leaves the business management to the younger generation. He especially likes to host groups that come to visit the facility.

Mickey and his wife, Agnes, love to travel in their RV. As a hobby, years ago, they began collecting ice making paraphernalia. As they developed an interest in the history of the business and the impact it has made on our country’s economy, they realized that there wasn’t much documented about the process of ice harvesting. They began a collection that at first was housed in their home and above the office. The items quickly outgrew their surroundings.

Mad Cow Disease – Facts you should know

Now that bovine spongiform encephalopathy or BSE has been detected in other European countries' cattle and two flocks of sheep in the U.S. have been seized over concerns they harbor a related illness, many U.S. businesses and consumers are wondering if "Mad Cow" is on its way here.

The U.S. government, as well as the cattle ranching, meat packing and related industries, have worked diligently for over 16 years to keep U.S. cattle and beef - BSE-free. A soon-to-be-published Harvard University study on the risk of U.S. cattle contracting BSE shows that it is extremely unlikely.

According to the American Meat Institute (AMI), U.S. cattle are under scrupulous surveillance at meat packing plants to ensure that none with any signs of disease enter the food chain. The government routinely tests suspect cattle for BSE and, after ten years and more than 12,000 tests, the disease has never been detected in U.S. cattle. U.S. cattle are also prohibited from consuming feed mixed with protein meal from other cattle or sheep. And the U.S. has strict limits on imports of livestock, beef and beef products to ensure that no BSE-contaminated animals or products enter this country.

The AMI feels that aggressive surveillance, import controls and feed restrictions in the U.S. will ensure that U.S. cattle and beef continue to lead the world in both safety and quality. Here are some commonly asked questions about BSE with answers:

What is "Mad Cow Disease"? "Mad Cow Disease" is the nickname for a foreign animal disease called bovine spongiform encephalopathy or BSE. The disease is unique to European cattle and causes BSE-related illnesses in the cattle herd. As a result, the U.S. government, as well as the U.S. cattle, animal feed and beef industries have taken aggressive actions over the last decade to ensure that BSE remains a foreign animal disease. The fact that we share no physical borders with any affected nations has been a key means of protecting our cattle.

What steps has the U.S. taken? The U.S. approach has been one of prevention using a "triple firewall" strategy. Together, these firewalls provide strong assurance that BSE will not impact the U.S. cattle supply. Because BSE is not present in U.S. herds, the first critical firewall in protecting U.S. cattle involves protecting U.S. borders. As early as 1989, the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) banned the import of cattle from countries with BSE.

The second critical firewall involves careful surveillance. USDA veterinarians are stationed at every U.S. meat packing plant and check cattle for signs of any disease - including BSE. No animal can be processed for meat without a veterinary inspection. If a steer or cow shows any symptoms that could possibly indicate BSE, the animal is considered "suspect," is removed from the plant and its brain is tested.

Of the roughly 12,000 “suspect” animals tested for BSE by the U.S. government, none have been positive.

The third critical firewall involves controlling what cattle are fed. Evidence indicates that BSE may have been caused through feeding practices. Even though the U.S. has no BSE in cattle and has successfully controlled scrapie in sheep, the feeding of any protein derived from ruminant animals (cow, sheep, goat or deer) to cattle has been banned. Taken together, these efforts provide the best possible assurance that U.S. cattle will remain BSE-free.

Does beef from BSE-infected animals make people sick?

Beef derived from BSE-infected animals does not appear to pose a risk. Only neurological tissue like the brain or spinal cord from an infected animal may pose a risk. It is noteworthy that the U.K. has a population of 59.5 million people - the vast majority of whom eat British beef - and only 84 cases of Creutzfeldt-Jacob Disease (vCJD) have been identified since BSE was first recognized in 1986. These figures underscore how rare the disease is and lend support to the theory that development of vCJD may require a combination of exposure to the BSE agent and a certain genetic predisposition.

People get classic CJD in the U.S. What causes it?

Classic CJD has been a recognized illness since the 1920s and occurs at a rate of one illness per million people worldwide in countries that do - and don't - eat beef. The scientific evidence suggests that CJD is caused in one of three ways: sporadic development, genetic predisposition, or, in rare instances, when medical devices that have made contact with a brain infected with CJD are not properly sterilized. There is absolutely no evidence to suggest that CJD is caused by any food, including beef.

What do the experts say about the risk of BSE in U.S. cattle?

To quote prominent health writer Abigail Trafford of the Washington Post, "The perception of risk is wildly out of proportion to the actual risk." Indeed, scientists at Harvard University who are completing a soon to be published study on the threat of BSE to the U.S. cattle herd say the risks are extremely low. According to Harvard’s BSE risk expert George Gray, "We have systems in place that, if they work properly, should keep mad cow out of our country. Even if the disease were to occur here, the risk to people is low because of the many safeguards in place to detect a sick animal so it couldn’t be eaten."

How safe is my beef?

The U.S. beef industry benefits by selling safe beef and utilizes world-class scientific and technological strategies to ensure its safety in every way. And because our “triple firewall” strategy has prevented BSE in our cattle herds, we can say with confidence that our beef is derived from BSE-free cattle and is as safe as we can possibly make it.

that you have agreed to with your TPP. AFD helped to successfully negotiate a transaction fee reimbursement for those retailers using their own equipment to process EBT. Retailers will receive reimbursements for the first two years of EBT implementation. During the first year, retailers will receive two cents for each transaction, and one and a half for the second year.

Those retailers who choose to use stand-alone (EBT only), state supplied terminals are actually using government-supplied equipment. The equipment is free of charge with no transaction charges, but there is a federal formula for who may receive it. For every $8,000 in monthly food stamp redemptions, a retailer may receive one state-provided terminal. Stores whose food stamp sales comprise 15% of their gross monthly sales may receive full lane coverage. The federal formula for supermarkets is a little different. The USDA Food & Nutrition Services classifies stores with annual gross sales over $2 million as a supermarket. For every $11,000 in monthly food stamp redemptions, one terminal is provided. So full lane coverage is not guaranteed with state equipment.

If you have any questions, call the EBT Customer Service Hotline at 1-800-350-8533.
New flavors of milk try to compete with sodas

Americans can now choose between their beloved soft drinks and the new flavors of milk, mocha-, banana- and even chai-flavored milks being offered by the top beverage giants. With brands like Tropicana beginning to create new flavors of juice, such as OJ with strawberries and bananas, and the current calcium-fortified-everything craze, milk hopped on the band-wagon by producing their own innovative bottle designs and varied flavors. Products like Dean’s chubby single-serve Milk Chug line and Land O’ Lakes Grip’n Go use bright labels, cartoonish writing and plastic containers to attract a new breed of milk enthusiasts. Not only has the repackaging of traditional milks attracted a broader market of milk drinkers, but the variety of flavors has also peaked the attention of both health-conscious adults and concerned parents.

Train Clerks to Say: “Is this a Debit Transaction”

Are your cashiers leaving thousands of dollars lying at the cashier’s window? Your store spends a lot of money on processing customer’s credit cards. But you already knew that. Did you know that one simple question by your cashier could cut those costs dramatically? “Will this be Debit?” Debit card transactions are generally a flat fee. If your store has the capability of accepting debit cards, you can save quite a bit of money by getting customers to use their debit card instead of a credit card.

Let’s say your customer wants to pay for their purchase with plastic and their total cost is $100. If your standard VISA rate is 1.28 percent plus a 16 cent transaction fee, paying for this on a credit card costs your store $1.44. Convincing the customer to pay with a debit card would only cost you 22 cents, a savings of $1.22 that goes straight to your bottom line!

Hard work (and a little luck) make Bee Bee’s a success

By Michele MacWilliams

Perhaps it was the luck of the Irish when, two days before St. Patrick’s Day, one of the customers of Bee Bee’s Liquor Store in Warren won a $25,000 pot of gold in a Jim Beam Sour Apple Sweepstakes. Maybe it wasn’t just a coincidence that the grand prize was either an apple-green Volkswagen Bug or $25,000. Nick Matti, Bee Bee’s co-owner, says that good luck has been bestowed on his customers before. His store has seen more than its share of large lottery winners.

Whether the luck of St. Patrick had anything to do with it or not didn’t seem to matter to an excited Mary Lou Tyler, who received the $25,000 check from George Zrinyi of Jim Beam Brands, during a short presentation inside Bee Bee’s Liquor Store.

“We’re very happy for her,” said Nick. “It is always great when something special and good happens to nice people.”

Mary Lou isn’t the only nice person at Bee Bee’s to receive some good luck. Perhaps it was the luck of the Irish that shined down on Nick and his brother Ronnie nine years ago when they bought Bee Bee’s. They sold a store in Detroit to make the move to Warren and haven’t regretted it for a minute.

“Sales have increased every year,” says Nick proudly.

It’s no wonder. The two take a great deal of pride in their store and the customer service they offer to those who enter its doors. Over the years they have gained a reputation for their huge selection of liquor, beer and wine. “Stores in the area send people here if they don’t have an item. They say that ‘if Bee Bee’s doesn’t have it then don’t bother looking!’” beams Nick.

The liquor case behind the counter is stocked from floor to ceiling with just about every gin, vodka, Scotch, whiskey, bourbon, brandy, rum, cognac, and cordial imaginable. “We have customers that travel for up to 50 miles because they know they'll find what they are looking for here," says Nick. The store carries a large selection of single malts -- some of which cost up to $500 a bottle. However perhaps the most expensive item in the store is a fifth of Louis XIII Cognac at $1,500.

Nick estimates that 50 percent of his customers are local residents and the other 50 percent travel from 10 to 20 miles for Bee Bee's vast selection of specialty liquors, variety of beers and especially its huge wine selection.

Three isles of wine offer something for every taste and budget. As an example, Nick points to over 120 different selections of Cabernet Sauvignon! He has wine from all over the world -- from Alsace to New Zealand -- and in price ranges from everyday consumption to special occasion.

To accompany the beverage selection, Bee Bee's is also home to a humidor case, with a good assortment of cigars.

Bee Bee's location, one block south of 13 Mile on Schoenherr in Warren, seems an unlikely spot for a store that specializes in upscale wines and single malt Scotch. Miles of middle class suburbs surround Bee Bees and it would seem that a bottle of $90 Stags Leap Cellars Cabernet would be a difficult sell. Not so, insists Nick. He maintains that with the much-publicized health benefits associated with drinking wine, many people -- regardless of economic status -- are choosing wine over other beverages and pouring better wines when they do drink.

During this writer’s visit, Nick interrupted the interview to help a local customer choose a wine for a special occasion -- something that happens very often throughout the course of the day.

The two brothers work long hours in the store, which is open Monday through Saturday from 9:00 a.m. until 11:00 p.m. and on Sunday from noon until 8:00 p.m. Ronnie is due for back surgery in May and is in obvious pain. Nick will have to cover for his brother while he is recuperating and knows he will feel Ronnie's absence.

The Matti brothers lost their mother seven years ago and their father last June. Their sister, Brenda, also helps in the store.

"These two never stop," pipes John W. Smith, a customer and friend that feels so much at home in the store that he sits on a chair behind the counter.

"I come in here about four times a week to hang out and watch the assortment of customers come and go," says Mr. Smith, a retired Deputy County Treasurer for Macomb.

The Matti brothers enjoy his company and offer him friendship and usually something to eat or drink.
Seminars for food & food service establishments

Food Service Associates, is presenting seminars on the new Michigan Food Law. This is a "unicode" which applies to all food and food service establishments, including grocery stores, convenience stores, restaurants, institutional food service operations and caterers.

The new code contains many significant changes in rules regarding the preparation and service of food. In addition, there have been major changes in the inspection procedures utilized by health departments and the Department of Agriculture.

These seminars are designed to assure that key personnel of all food establishments are fully aware of the requirements of the new code so that they can be in full compliance.

The new code and inspection procedures are based on the U.S. Food and Drug Administration's model food code and the Hazard Analysis Critical Control Point (HACCP) food safety system.

In this seminar, you will learn how to identify critical control points (CCPs) in your own operation, the new code requirements for each CCP, and how to conduct HACCP self-inspections. All who attend will be awarded a certificate of training (actual size 8 1/2" X 11"). No test is required for this certificate.

The seminar is worth six continuing education hours pre-approved by ADA, DMA, ASFSA and ACF. Seminars begin at 9:00 AM and end at 4:00 PM. Lunch is on your own and not included in the $49 per person fee.

Important notice: This is not the Michigan Food Manager Certification Program. Certified Managers who do not know about the new food code standards should also consider attending this seminar.

There are comprehensive changes from prior law. The intent of the new law is to protect the public and to eliminate overlapping and conflicting regulation of food handlers. Some of the new provisions are outlined as follows:

- Uniformity & Unification:
  - Elimination of dual state and county licensing and inspection of food

For all food establishment licenses:
- Enforcement & Compliance:
  - Adds new administration penalties

Produce for Better Health Foundation Announces 2001 5 A Day Marketing Program

With official 5 A Day promotional materials, 5 A Day Billboards, recipe/tip cards, customization, 5 A Day Children’s Activity Sheets, web-based marketing, in-store advertising, and cross-promotions, the 2001 5 A Day Retail Marketing Program has plenty to offer for the new year.

“The Produce for Better Health Foundation is expanding further to customize materials for retailers and make the most out of reaching consumers inside and outside the store,” said Reggie Griffin, vice president of Produce Merchandising and Procurement for The Kroger Co., and the chairman of the Foundation’s Marketing Committee.

Retailers can spread the 5 A Day message to kids with 5 A Day Children’s Activity Sheets. Each activity sheet, distributed as camera-ready slicks in waves throughout the year, provides interactive learning of 5 A Day with a focus on individual commodities using illustrations, 5 A Day tips, an easy 5 A Day recipe, and games or activities.

The 5 A Day Billboard program is a cost-effective and powerful vehicle to extend the 5 A Day message beyond the store. The 5 A Day Billboard features full-color photography of a commodity, plus the 5 A Day logo and message. Retailers

Retailers can spread the 5 A Day message to kids with Children’s Activity Sheets.

...and industry members can work with the Foundation to place billboards in markets across the country. Industry companies conducting billboard advertising can leverage their relationship with billboard advertising agencies to obtain free, public service announcement space to display the 5 A Day Billboards. Results from a 5 A Day Billboard test demonstrated a 4-20 percent increase in produce sales in area stores compared to the overall chain.

Other components of the 2001 5 A Day Retail Marketing Program include promotional materials, brochures, and items from the Official 5 A Day Catalog. Retailers can choose from more than 65 different commodity-specific recipe/tip cards that include basic selection, preparation, and nutrition information.

Participating retailers will also benefit from 5 A Day cross-promotions. Once again, the Foundation will conduct several cross-promotions linking produce with non-produce products through cents-off produce coupons, special inserts in leading women’s magazines and 5 A Day recipes. The expanded retail portion of the www.5aday.com web-site will provide downloadable text, ad copy, graphics, and more to serve as a significant retail source.

For more information or to order materials, contact Amy Bielicki at (302) 235-2329, ext 19 or e-mail abielick@5aday.com.

Foundation Partners with Acosta to Spread 5 A Day message

The Produce for Better Health Foundation and Acosta Sales & Marketing will partner to spread the 5 A Day message to retailers and suppliers across the country. This partnership, made possible with help from Reggie Griffin of The Kroger Co. and Brad Raffanti of Acosta Sales & Marketing, enables the Foundation to communicate 5 A Day marketing and merchandising strategies through Acosta’s vast network of relationships with retailers and suppliers. During regular in-person sales meetings with retail produce buyers and merchandisers, Acosta will discuss how 5 A Day retail marketing efforts can boost produce sales. Acosta will also include 5 A Day information and updates in its e-mail communications to its customers.
President Bush Consults with Food Distributors in White House Meeting

President Bush thanked a group of nearly 35 business leaders — including food distributors — for their support and asked them to continue carrying his tax-cutting message to the wider business community and to members of Congress.

Unified Western Grocers President & CEO Alfred A. Plamann, Nash Finch Company President & CEO Ron Marshall, Food Distributors International President & CEO John R. Block, and IFDA President John Gray, were among the business leaders who attended the White House meeting of the Tax Relief Coalition.

President Bush vowed not to compromise on his campaign pledge to cut taxes, and noted that while there was criticism for his tax plan during the campaign, subsequent government projections of budget surpluses over the next few years totaling $5.6 trillion and the recent support by economists for tax cuts bear out the correctness of his proposal.

Plamann urged the president to reach out to Mexican-Americans in Southern California and throughout the American Southwest, to help them appreciate the value of the tax cuts he proposes. Mexican-Americans had not fully supported the president during the campaign.

"It was a great meeting," Gray said afterward, noting the warmth and lack of pretension in the president's style. Block and Gray agreed that the meeting, also attended by Secretary of the Treasury Paul O'Neill and Bush economic advisor Lawrence Lindsay, was a perfect prelude to the March 26-27 Joint Public Affairs Assembly (PAA) hosted in Washington by FDI, FMI and National Grocers Association.

At that time food distributors will spend a day visiting members of Congress and their staffs to help educate them about issues important to the food distribution industry — including tax relief.

Elements of the President's $1.6 trillion tax relief plan include:

• Eliminating the death tax
• Simplifying the tax code by reducing the number of tax brackets from five to four: 10%, 15%, 25% and 33%
• Reducing the marriage penalty which costs the average working couple $1,400 per year just for being married
• Expanding the incentives for charitable giving.

Groups with FDI at the White House included members of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Wholesaler-Distributors, the National Restaurant Association, the Food Marketing Institute, and others.

"We are gratified that the president is interested in the opinions of the food distribution community," said Block. "We will continue our support for his administration on the issues that are central to the interests of our industry."

Michigan Rolldown “Bonus Play” Promotion Is A Big Success!

By Commissioner Don Gilmer

Thanks to the extra efforts of each and every Michigan Lottery retailer, the Lottery’s recent Michigan Rolldown “Bonus Play” promotion was a huge success! From January 15 through February 10, 2001, Rolldown players all across Michigan took advantage of the opportunity to purchase a five-panel Michigan Rolldown wager, earning them a sixth “easy pick” for free, or a ten-panel wager with two free extra “easy picks.”

Over the course of the promotion, over 436,000 free wagers were given away which result in a net gain of more than $730,000 in Michigan Rolldown sales. This special promotion was a winning combination for both Lottery players and retailers. Every five-panel ticket sold earned Lottery retailers 20 percent more in sales commission!

Because of the great success of this promotion, the Lottery plans to implement another Rolldown “Bonus Play” promotion in May. More information about the new promotion will be available very soon.

Front Pair Payout Daily 4 Promotion. Some of the Lottery’s most popular promotions have been tied to the Daily 3 & 4 games. I am proud to announce that the Lottery has a brand new Daily 4 promotion beginning April 2 and running through April 28. The “Front Pair Payout” will award Daily 4 players a $10 prize when their straight bet matches the first two numbers drawn. The odds of matching the front pair are just 1 in 100, which is much easier to win than any other Daily 4 prize! The Lottery expects to pay out more than $600,000 more in Daily 4 prizes due to this promotion. With all of these extra $10 winners coming to your stores to collect their prizes, you can look forward to increased sales as many players will want to try their luck again. Just like any other prize cashed in-store, retailers will also receive the 2 percent redemption commission on every valid front pair match paid.

More Money For Mother’s Day. The Lottery is offering another incentive program for retailers beginning on April 23 and running through May 21. The “More Money For Mother’s Day” program could help you win an extra $300! Retailers who activate or settle more books of this year’s $2 Mother’s Day-themed instant game – “Lucky Mom” (#478) — than they did during the same four-week time period as last year’s “Lucky Mom” (#419), are automatically entered into a one-time cash drawing. The total number of books that are settled or activated by each retailer before May 21, 2001 will be compared to last year’s total to qualify retailers for the drawing. Fifty lucky retailers will win $100 each. Be sure to have plenty “Lucky Mom” (#478) tickets on hand this year to ensure that your name is entered into the drawing!

Region 7 Lottery Office Has Moved. The Lottery’s Region 7 office has moved from Redford Township to Dearborn Heights. The address of the new location is: 27315 W. Warren, Cambridge Center (at W. Warren & Inkster Roads), Dearborn Heights, MI 48127. The new phone number at the Dearborn Heights office is: (313) 565-0219. If you have customers who visited the Redford Township office, please inform them of the change.

Low Sales Fees. According to the Michigan Administrative Code, the Lottery is allowed to assess low sales fees. During the 2001 calendar year, the Lottery will monitor the sales See Lottery, page 28 activity of all on-line Lottery retailers to evaluate the cost-effectiveness of the terminal installation and to assure that Lottery resources are allocated to generate the maximum revenue for the state School Aid Fund. A minimum of $1,200 weekly total Lottery sales average (on-line plus instant games) throughout the year is needed to avoid a low sales fee assessment at the end of December 2001. When you initially receive a terminal, the first 26 weeks of operation with the terminal are exempt from the low sales fee. Our Lottery sales representatives will track your sales and offer advice and assistance to help increase sales and avoid or minimize any fees. I encourage you to talk with your sales representative if you have any questions regarding this performance requirement.

"$1,000,000 Jackpot Sweepstakes." One lucky retailer has already collected a $2,000 sweepstakes prize for selling a top-prize winning ticket in the "$1,000,000 Jackpot" instant game. On February 28, an anonymous winner from Mt. Morris claimed the first $1,000,000 prize in the game. The lucky ticket was purchased at Lucky Star Food Market in Flint, and the store received the standard $2,000 bonus commission plus the extra $2,000 sweepstakes prize. I encourage you to keep plenty of the "$1,000,000 Jackpot" tickets on hand so you too can have a shot at collecting this great prize!

New Instants! The Lottery is excited to debut six instant games in April. April 2 marks the return of an old player favorite - the $2 "Wild Time Doubler" — with a $30,000 top prize. On April 9, the $2 "Treasure Hunt" hits counters with a $25,000 top prize. Customers will have two reasons to flock to your stores on April 9, as that also marks the debut of the $1 "Bring Home The Bacon," offering a $1,000 top prize. On April 16, players will be raking in the bucks when the $5 "Mega Bucks" instant ticket goes on sale offering a whopping $300,000 top prize! Just in time for Mother's Day, the $2 "Lucky Mom" offering a $15,000 top prize, will hit ticket counters on April 23. Finally, the Lottery is proud to introduce the $1 "Great Lakes Treasures" which offers a $4,000 top prize. This new game also goes on sale April 23 and features six different Michigan scenes.

MLCC violations: To Fight or Not to Fight

By Kallas & Henk, P.C.

We are often asked by liquor licensees whether it makes sense to fight violations issued by the Michigan Liquor Control Commission or simply acknowledge the violations. Licensees also want to know whether they need to be represented by a lawyer at the violation hearing.

The answer is that it sometimes pays to fight and sometimes it is better to acknowledge the violation. When a licensee has a good record (no prior violations of the same type and not many other types of violations) and the violation is for a routine type of circumstance, it usually does not make financial sense to pay a lawyer to appear at a violation hearing. The maximum fine for most types of violations is $300 and without a prior history of violations, the commission is highly unlikely to suspend or revoke a license. Additionally, unless there is some substantial defect in the charge, a licensee is unlikely to get the violation dismissed, even with a lawyer.

In other circumstances, however, it is advisable to be represented by an attorney at a hearing. These circumstances include a prior violation history, certain types of violations (for allowing drug transactions for example) and in situations where the violation is out of the ordinary (such as a flagrant intentional violation of the rules). These types of situations could result in a suspension or revocation of a liquor license. Also where there are many counts to a complaint, the aggregate fines could run into several thousand dollars. For a sale to a minor or intoxicated person, the commission may issue a fine of $1000 for each count of the complaint. If the complaint contains five counts of selling to intoxicated persons, the aggregate fine could be $5000 in addition to a suspension of the license.

There is no one right answer to whether a lawyer is needed to contest a violation. Each individual circumstance must be considered. If, regrettably, you receive notice of violations from the Liquor Control Commission, we would be happy to discuss the situation with you to help you determine whether you need representation.—Reprinted with permission. Insurance costs will rise

The days of steadily declining insurance rates are probably over. Over the last decade, rates for general liability, liquor liability, property and worker’s compensation insurance have come down dramatically. Just in the last three years, average rates for liquor liability insurance declined as much as 57 percent for restaurants and hotels, 57 percent for clubs, 57 percent for bars and taverns and 54 percent for package stores.

For reasons related to the general insurance market, rates have already begun to climb and you can probably expect to pay more over the next few years. Worker’s compensation coverage in particular, will likely be much more costly.—Reprinted with permission. Kallas & Henk. P.C.. The Hospitality Advisor

AFD Food & Beverage Report. April 2001....29
African-American shoppers seek safe stores

While African Americans share common attitudes with other American consumers when it comes to grocery shopping, enhancing the shopping experience of this growing $47 billion market segment depends on food retailers implementing strategies that are based on both the similarities and the key differences of these consumers.

These findings highlight The African American Grocery Shopper 2000, a new research report from the Food Marketing Institute (FMI). Jointly sponsored by Kraft and Procter & Gamble, the first-ever FMI study of African American shoppers examines the attitudes and preferences of this diverse group – projected to number over one million by 2010 – and the marketing strategies retailers can use to reach them.

Similar to most U.S. consumers, African American shoppers seek high-quality food, friendly service and low prices in deciding where to shop. The top five factors that African American shoppers consider are: a clean, neat store; fresh, high-quality meats; fresh, high-quality produce; courteous and friendly employees; and variety. Other factors that these shoppers consider when deciding where to shop include safety outside the store, particularly in urban areas; community involvement by the store; the presence of African-American employees and managers, and store features such as bakeries, banking services and pharmacies.

The African-American Shopper

The study reveals that African American grocery shoppers make an average of 2.2 trips to their primary grocery store in a typical week and spend an average of $94 each week, with more than three-quarters of that amount ($73) spent at their primary grocery store. In general, these shoppers also make more trips to the grocery store and spend more per household than mainstream consumers. They are also looking for ways to save money. Sales, money-saving specials and coupons are important to this market.

Although 50 percent of African American shoppers prefer supermarkets, one in five shop at small, non-supermarket neighborhood stores most often. Since this market segment is predominantly urban, the frequent patronage of small format stores is likely due to store locations and transportation access.

On the whole, this market is predominately female (74 percent), urban (66 percent) — with nearly half living in the South (47 percent); has a median household income of $31,000 each year, and has an average household size of 2.9 people.

The study identifies four shopper segments based on the above demographics and on the shopping habits and attitudes among African American shoppers:

- Low Price Seekers, Culturally Aware Shoppers, Satisfied Shoppers and Basic Buyers.

Low Price Seekers have the lowest annual household income among the four and spend the least on groceries. They are sensitive to price and lack brand loyalty. Most of them live in urban areas and spend less than $50 a week on groceries.

Culturally Aware Shoppers seek both high-quality products and extra features. They are also the segment most likely to shop at stores that have African American ownership, management and customers, and that sell products manufactured by minority-owned companies. They are especially interested in frequent shopper/reward programs. More than any other segment, they demand to be treated with respect by all store employees.

Satisfied Shoppers have relatively higher household incomes ($36,200) and easygoing attitudes toward grocery shopping. They look forward to grocery shopping and value certain cultural cues, such as African American employees and customers and products manufactured by minority-owned companies. They are also active in loyalty/rewards programs.

Basic Buyers primarily look for the "basics" in a grocery store. They do not enjoy grocery shopping, tend to shop at large chain stores and are loyal to the brands they currently buy. They are especially interested in fresh, high-quality meats, produce and products, and fast checkout lines. Cultural cues are less important.

See African-American shopper page 33.
Dear AFD,

It is with deep appreciation that I extend heartfelt thanks for your support of my 3rd Annual “Turkey Giveaway” held on Saturday, November 18, 2000, at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul in Detroit, Michigan. Your contribution enabled me to provide turkeys to approximately 300 families for Thanksgiving.

In honor of your generosity, it gives me great pleasure to bestow the “Spirit of Detroit” award to your organization as a symbol of my gratitude. I would officially like to present this award to you during the Detroit City Council’s formal session on Wednesday, January 10, 2001, at 11:45 a.m. A light lunch will be served immediately following the presentation.

On behalf of the many, many “thankful” families who benefited from this endeavor, please know that your support shall never be forgotten.

Sincerely,

SUPERVALU announces 5 A Day Merchandising Award Winner

In a repeat performance, Bill Johnson and Laurel County Market IGA won SUPERVALU's sixth annual 5 A Day Merchandising Award for 2000. The corporate-wide contest inspires participating stores to educate their communities about eating 5 A Day — sales, participation, and community outreach increase with each contest,” said Mike Kemp, corporate director of produce for SUPERVALU, of Minneapolis, Minn., and chairman of the Produce for Better Health Foundation’s Board of Directors.

Conference calls, mailings, area retail meetings, and special advertising promotions are used to encourage the retailers to reach their communities, according to Steve Coleman, corporate promotion manager for SUPERVALU and 5 A Day coordinator for SUPERVALU corporate contests.

While this marks the second consecutive first place award for Laurel County Market IGA, it is the sixth straight victory by a member of SUPERVALU’s Southeast Region. The leadership of John Schildroth, produce promotion manager for SUPERVALU’s Southeast Region, champions these efforts. Johnson credits Schildroth for inspiration and Laurel County Market IGA’s creative staff for conducting exciting displays and promotions.

Kraft to proceed with IPO

The initial public offering of Kraft Foods will raise up to $5 billion for Philip Morris — less than the $5 billion to $10 billion originally expected, the result of a weak market for equity financing. Experts say it is more important for Philip Morris to get their Kraft shares priced than to raise money. -Financial Times

Albertson’s board adopts new guidelines

Albertson’s board of directors has been restructured in accordance with new corporate guidelines. The action has resulted in the voluntary resignation of five board members, effective June 14.

Marketing to the African American Shopper

In targeting this market, the study suggests that retailers include the following messages in their marketing efforts:

• Emphasize fresh, high-quality products. Ninety percent of African American grocery shoppers value high-quality products, especially meat and produce.
• Offer a wide variety of products and be well organized. Most African American customers like having many options to choose from at the grocery store (81 percent); but at the same time, they are also the most likely market segment to feel overwhelmed by the different varieties and alternatives available, (37 percent).
• Focus on low prices, sales and money-saving specials. Seventy-eight percent rate sale items and money-saving specials as important.
• Use hands-on strategies to influence purchase decisions at the grocery store. This could include the use of special displays and free samples.
• Treat all customers with respect and courtesy. Eighty-seven percent of African American shoppers say these are important in deciding where to shop. The same number say it is absolutely essential that they be treated with respect by all store employees.

Attitudes and Preferences of the African American Shopper

Survey results also offer insights about attitudes and preferences that may be more important to African American shoppers. Suggestions for retailers include:

• Make contributions to and participate in the local community. Three in five African American grocery shoppers (61 percent) consider this important. Contributions must truly add value to the community rather than be self-serving for the retailer.
• Be sensitive to “cultural cues,” especially having African American employees and managers. More than half of African American grocery shoppers surveyed (59 percent) say it is important that the grocery stores where they shop have African American employees and/or managers.
• Expand the variety of what might be considered “ethnic foods.” Regional areas influence food preferences. While the majority prepare “Soul/Southen style” food, ethnic types of food such as Caribbean, Creole/Cajun, Tex-Mex/Mexican, Italian and Chinese are also popular with African Americans’ palates.
• Remember that the African American grocery shopping market is not an undifferentiated mass market. They are a varied group with different shopping habits and grocery store needs. However, it is important to note that location of residence, household income levels and other demographic characteristics make a difference in what shoppers want and need, regardless of race.
• Recognize the difficulty of promoting private label brands to consumers who prefer well-known national brands. African Americans tend to prefer well-known brands. Those from high-income households ($50,000 or more per year) are the most likely to be open to choosing new brands of groceries (76 percent).

To purchase a copy of The African American Grocery Shopper 2000, contact FMI Publications and Video Sales at (202)452-8444 or visit the FMI Web site at www.fmi.org. The cost is $65 for members and $125 for non-members.

FMI announces initiative to represent independent operators

The Food Marketing Institute (FMI) announced at its annual Midwinter Executive Conference the formation of a new Independent Operators Division that will endeavor to both represent the interests of independent supermarket companies as well as better serve their specific needs.

The move was approved by FMI’s board of directors. Michael Sansolo, currently FMI’s senior vice president for education, industry relations and research, will head up the new division with the title of president.

Tim Hammonds, president and CEO of FMI, said the move was dictated by the organization’s belief that it has many products and services of real value to the independent community, and that these offerings need to be better communicated. He said that the creation of the new division formalizes FMI’s belief in the vitality of the independent sector as a continuing force in the industry, and noted that Sansolo is the “perfect person” for the job.

Sansolo, for his part, said he was excited about the new challenge, which he said would help bring “focus” to its ability to provide services that can help independents deal with the challenges of a fast-changing industry. He said that FMI’s existing Independent Operators Committee would be a “guiding body” for the new effort, calling it a “vibrant committee with a diverse membership.”

Canada’s Largest C-Store Chain Plots U.S. Invasion

All those British Invasions (the wars, the mop-top music, Virgin Cola) were mere decoys for the real threat—Canada's Largest C-Store Chain. Alimentation Couche-Tard (ACT), has its sights set on acquiring its way into the American market, according to the Canadian Press.

The company is reportedly looking for a medium-sized, profitable chain of 150-400 stores, within two flying hours of Montreal. ACT has already investigated two possibilities, neither of which met its criteria.

The chain operates 1,625 stores across Canada.

BP unveils new convenience store concept in Indianapolis

BP’s new, high-tech convenience store concept saw its U.S. debut in Indianapolis.

The new BP Connect format, which was introduced in England and Portugal, operates partially on solar power and allows motorists to order merchandise from the fuel pumps. The store also features a Wild Bean Café and Internet kiosks, along with the new sunflower-like BP logo and branding strategy.

BP tested its Connect concept this summer in Atlanta and reported that consumers said they would actually go out of their way to patronize such a facility.

Such brand loyalty is a rare asset in the world of convenience stores, which are, by definition, more about location and convenience than brand.

BP plans to solidify this sentiment with local advertising and promotions for each launch.

Despite the marvel that consumers displayed at BP Connect’s features, we’re afraid it will be short-lived. These improvements are already on the to-do lists of c-store chains that can afford them.

and Mickey started storing them in a small warehouse on the premises at 1665 Yeager Street, in Port Huron. In 1987 the warehouse became the Knowlton Ice Museum. The museum collection is run by a family foundation, headed by Chuck's sister Judy Campbell, with the intent of preserving the ice memorabilia into perpetuity.

Balanced by a lighthearted collection of dolls, toys and buggies that Agnes has also collected; ice memorabilia includes saws, ice shavers, picks, chisels, and hooks. There are numerous iceboxes: both commercial and those used in homes, both plain and fancy. A wide variety of written articles, magazines and books are kept along with ephemera like ice cards in bright colors that were placed in the store window to alert the delivery wagon. Coupon books are also displayed. The holder purchased the book of coupons that could be redeemed, as needed, for a certain amount of ice usually costing less than a penny a pound.

The history of ice harvesting, pre-refrigeration, is fascinating and largely unknown. The Knowlton's museum reveals details about the system that just a few people living today remember. Although ice was produced in the 1700s, at the turn of the twentieth century ice making was one of the country's ten largest industries. Communities came together in the winter to harvest ice much as they did hay in the summer. The Great Lakes provided ice for an area as far south as St. Louis and Cincinnati. Ice harvesters and their families traveled around much like migrant workers. Almost any body of water could produce ice blocks.

Artifacts at the museum include special saws and horse-drawn plows. Once the ice was cut into large blocks and separated with hay or sawdust, it was stored in a huge warehouse and used all summer until the supply was exhausted. America's ice industry was so far reaching that it was capable of shipping to South America.

All this and more is documented in the Knowlton Ice Museum. The museum screens a rare film of an actual ice business in the early 20th century. Their prize possession is the antique ice wagon they found in Cincinnati.

The commitment to the museum is just part of the heart of Party Time Ice. Victims of Hurricane Andrew were grateful recipients of over 7,000 bags of free ice that Chuck and his wife, Vicky drove to Homestead, Florida.

At AFD we are particularly fortunate to be affiliated with Party Time Ice. Perhaps you met Director of Sales Marty McNulty at one of our trade shows or at our golf outing handing out donated bags of ice for AFD functions.

You can say hello to Marty McNulty at booth number 209 at AFD's trade show and ask about Party Time Ice's service. If you're in Port Huron, a trip to the Knowlton Ice Museum is educational and fun. For more information about Party Time Ice call (810) 987-7100.

AFD Food & Beverage Report. April 2001
Good things come in pairs.

Now Daily 4 players win just by matching two!

It's the Front Pair Payout – April 2 through 28 – and Daily 4 players who match the first two numbers drawn on their straight ticket win $10. With odds of matching the front pair a mere 1 in 101, this month we’re expecting to pay out $600,000 more in Daily 4 prizes. So what do all these $10 winners mean to you? Increased sales, real excitement and 2% redemption commissions on every valid front pair paid.

Remember – Front Pair Payout is April 2-28, with both midday and evening drawings, so let your customers know and make the most of this opportunity. Front Pair Payout makes the Daily 4 better than ever.
