I am asked frequently by members: “When will things start improving?”

2009 gave us one of the most brutal and worst economic years in Michigan and Ohio. Both states have taken a hit with high unemployment rates, major auto industry problems, and a financial lending crisis. The housing market has buckled under the current conditions. It seems impossible to get any financing to fund growth, and at times, to even maintain what you currently own. Fear and panic have caused businesses and consumers to adjust their spending patterns downwards. Although the damage that has been done is significant, I am optimistic about 2010 and 2011.

Recovery is slow, but is coming.

I remain optimistic that the industry will not only survive but also thrive in the coming two years. Things go in cycles, and I view these times as part of a cyclical economic pattern. History shows that over the last 100 years, these downturns last 12 months—20 months if you count the Great Depression. But one thing is for sure: This will end, and we'll bounce back to a new era of prosperity as our country did after the Depression. History has shown this to be true.

Although it may be some time yet before we see sustained job growth in our two states, the auto industry seems to have emerged intact from its greatest crisis in history. Job loss was the highest in 2009 and will continue in 2010, but at a much reduced pace. I hope and believe that 2011 will bring some recovery in the labor market. Retail trends are a strong indicator when things are turning bad, but retail is also one of the first areas to improve when things start to go right again.

Survival Tips

Here are some survival tips suggested by ACNielsen's Consumer Insights to help you maximize potential in the face of consumers' tightened purse strings. These suggestions are nothing new, and many of you have been implementing these strategies already. Nevertheless, they are good reminders.

1. Benchmark and monitor shopper dynamics by category and across the entire store.
2. Think outside traditional channel categories by understanding pricing, assortment, and promotion strategies.
3. Leverage manufacturer expertise to stay ahead of consumer trends.
4. Be quick to accept and quick to discontinue new products.
5. Happy associates make good shopper engagements.
6. Use e-mail to contact shoppers.
7. Develop premium, exclusive brands. Private label doesn't always have to be the low-price alternative.
8. Translate frequent shopper programs into loyalty programs.

I wish you all a very Happy Holiday and Prosperous New Year!

MICHIGAN UPDATES

- SSDA-AT/NCP. Participated in SSDA-AT/NCP Annual Board meeting and Trade Show in Ocean City, Maryland.
- Universal health care. Attended presentation by Congressman Dingell and other federal officials on the topic of universal health care. Since several different proposals have been floated, it was difficult to isolate the issues that would affect AFPD members. The "cut-off" level for mandatory employer participation appears to be somewhere between 20 and 50 employees. AFPD continues to monitor the issue.
- Food safety. Conducted SuperSafeMark Manager's food safety courses and administered the National Registry for Food Safety Professionals examination to various retailers.
- Food Marketing Advisory. Attended the Western Michigan University Food Marketing Advisory meeting and attended the Food Marketing Scholarship luncheon attended by two AFPD scholarship award winners.
- Angel's night. Attended a meeting on Angel's Night for City of Detroit to discuss participation in preventing arsons and crimes on the days before Halloween.
- Crimestoppers Award. Attended Crimestoppers Award event at DTE Energy facility in Detroit where awards were given to three people who were instrumental in the Crimestoppers Program during 2009.
- Clean Energy Economy Forum. Attended Clean Energy Economy Forum in Saginaw where Federal and State of Michigan administration officials presented the plans for the Federal Cap and Trade legislation that has passed out of the U.S. House and is now being debated in the U.S. Senate. This legislation would be very detrimental to AFPD members because it would increase energy prices dramatically. AFPD has joined with other affected entities to seek a more reasonable solution.
- Environmental Clean Ups. Met with Michigan State Senator Cropsey to discuss sponsorship support for legislation to stop the combining on Part 201 and 213 regarding environmental cleanups.
- Tank storage. Participated in quarterly Aboveground Storage Tank and Underground Storage Tank Stakeholders' meeting, as well as the Michigan Underground Storage Tank Rules Ad-Hoc Committee meeting. AFPD continues to lobby for rules that retailers can afford.
- Tobacco tax. Conducted a meeting with R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company and AFPD members to discuss strategy and tactics to fight off federal and local tobacco tax increases. R.J.R will assist AFPD and our members in organizing meetings with key legislators to discuss our position on tobacco legislation.
- Pending legislation. Met with Michigan Lobbyists to discuss pending legislation that affects AFPD members.
- MI Lottery. Met with the Michigan Lottery Commissioner. Scott Bowen to discuss various lottery issues relating to Michigan retailers.

OHIO UPDATES

- Vera Ord, assistant chief, BUSTR Division, of the Ohio Fire Marshal's office, addressed AFPD members, associate members, and AFPD staff at the recent AFPD Ohio Regional Meeting held November 17, 2009 in Worthington, Ohio. Of the 83 attendees, 82 were independent retailers. In addition to BUSTR topics on the agenda included the Commercial Activity Tax penalties legislation for which AFPD was able to secure passage and various other issues of interest to AFPD members. Brad Bresnahan, the executive director of the Ohio Association of Credit Card Processors, presented the group on AFPD's new Group Rated Workers' Comp Program.
- Underground Storage Tank. Attended Ohio Underground Storage Tank (UST) public hearing where petitions to amended proposed rules were presented. AFPD continues to work with other associations to obtain UST rules that are reasonable to comply with at affordable levels of capital investment.
- Workers' Compensation Insurance. Met with representatives of CareWorks, Inc. (CCI) to discuss transition to CCI as AFPD's Ohio Workers Compensation Insurance Third Party Administrator.
- Workers' compensation meeting. Participated in the quarterly Bureau of Workers' Compensation Advisory Council Meeting. The Bureau of Workers' Compensation board of directors lowered the 2010 Group Rated Discount Program from the 2009 rate of 77 percent to a 2010 rate of 65 percent. They also voted in a surcharge that will reduce the maximum rate to 51 percent in 2010. In the past four years, they have reduced the rate by 30 percent plus the surcharge, which will cause most of Ohio employers to have a possible increase of 600 percent in premiums. AFPD and other associations have made a strong effort working with the Ohio Chamber of Commerce to stop this from happening.
- Cash at the pumps. Legislations have been drafted on this subject but have yet to be introduced.
- Petroleum Advisory meeting. Conducted a successful and informative Petroleum Advisory Council meeting in Perrysburg, Ohio, to discuss pending legislation and strategy.
- CAT Tax. AFPD was successful in getting legislation passed pertaining to suppliers violating CAT Tax rules and regulations. AFPD is presently setting up guidelines on how to handle this procedure with the Ohio Department of Taxation. We recently provided a formula that could reasonably be substituted for the present CAT Tax collection procedure. This recommended plan would move the CAT Tax collection to the petroleum "rack." resulting in more money for the state and a level playing field for retailers.

EPA Waiver for E15 Looking More Doubtful

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has until Dec. 1 to respond to a call by ethanol lobbyists for a waiver for 15 percent ethanol blends (E15). Unfortunately, the answer the biofuels community may get is just a request for more research.

Margo Oge, director of EPA’s Office of Transportation and Air Quality, says that although petitioner Growth Energy provided the agency with significant amounts of data on the legal and technical justifications for allowing E15 sales, the agency may seek more information.

EPA received around 80,000 comments during the comment period, which ended in July. It was clear that comments fell into two distinct camps, Oge said: 1) Don’t do it. You can’t legally, you don’t have the data and it’ll destroy cars, and 2) You can do it legally and technically.

Before granting a waiver, EPA must evaluate the emissions impact of E12 and E15, two of the alternatives to E10, that have the same legal and technical challenges, she said. This question has to be answered not only for new cars but also for the existing fleet of on-road and off-road vehicles. And the impacts on emissions control systems in the existing fleet need to be calculated over the useful life of the vehicle, e.g., 120,000 miles.

Other wrinkles are the potential for misleading EPA’s authority to mandate retail labeling, and whether infrastructure such as underground storage tanks and dispensers can handle greater than E10 blends. Oge said. The agency may need more data before making its decision whether to grant the waiver, she said. (Oil Express)

Michigan Motor Fuel Retailers Advised to Review Bills of Lading

The Michigan Department of Agriculture Motor Fuels Quality Program (MFQ) monitors many different motor fuel specifications, including octane (AKI) and ethanol level. The MFQ program urges retailers to check bills of lading supplied by their distributor to ensure they are receiving the expected product.

This year there have been several instances where retailers have received lower octane products from their suppliers and sold the gasoline from a dispenser that does not have the proper grade name or AKI posted. This is a violation of PA 44 Michigan Motor Fuels Quality Act of 1984. If the retailers had reviewed the bills of lading supplied by the delivery drivers, they would have caught the error or change in product and been able to make the appropriate correction prior to a state inspector sampling the gasoline in violation. A change in the premium octane being delivered can also result in a midgrade product blended at the pump with a lower octane.

Ethanol is also tested by the MFQ laboratory, and the program has seen instances where a retailer has received product without ethanol, when previously they were receiving a 10 percent ethanol blend. This can cause a vapor pressure and/or octane violation to occur. A review of the bill of lading by retailers may help avoid a similar violation.

As a reminder: The Motor Fuels Quality Act requires retailers to maintain motor fuel delivery documents on site for a minimum of 30 days prior to transfer to another location. Department inspectors will review these documents when on location. A notice of violation may be issued on-site if the documents are not available at the retail location during an inspection.

Don’t Trust the ‘Herd’ Mentality

In today’s atmosphere, we must be careful not to get caught up in the "herd" mentality. Because most of us tend to associate with people in business, political, and ethnic groups that are similar to us, we are susceptible to being part of the wandering herd.

What’s scary about the herd mentality is how insidiously it gets you to see things differently. In fact, a recent experiment showed that we may actually be hard-wired to believe what the crowd tells us, even against our own convictions. In an experiment conducted at Emory University, participants were asked to look at an object (an assemblage of cubes) and then judge how the object would look if it were rotated slightly. However, there was a twist. Other participants—who in reality were actors instructed to give wrong answers in an attempt to sway the opinions of their fellow participants. Oddly enough, the real subjects, influenced by the actors, gave incorrect responses despite what their own eyes told them.

Brain scans found that participants didn’t just decide to go along with the crowd. Instead, the crowd’s opinion actually changed their perception of the problem. Participants “saw” the objects differently. The “herd,” it seems, can alter our perception of reality. Further brain scans performed as part of the study showed that disagreeing with a group stimulates pain centers in the brain.

So, how do you resist being co-opted by the madness of crowds? It’s not easy, but be aware of how easily we’re subconsciously influenced. As an entrepreneur you have a head start on the general population because you tend to be an independent thinker. Make it part of your routine to network with businesspeople of different vocations. In addition, maintain your own value system as a benchmark. Stay away from the naysayers, both in and out of your business profession. Limit your exposure to those who regularly gloat in reporting negative events over which you have no control.

Crystal balls are great in fantasy land, but here in the real world, we need statistics, forecasts, and expert advice. Nevertheless, retailers and their suppliers have a pretty good gut feeling about what to expect in 2010.

"Our company is confident about 2010 being a good year," says Sherwood Foods' Howard Ishbia. "However, during these tough economic times, traditional business expectations are precarious at best."

Noting that all businesses across the board have had to adapt to a very uncertain economy, Ishbia says that Sherwood Foods has adjusted to this trend by becoming more diverse in its product offerings and working with customers to provide a better value for both the retailer and the end consumer. "It is our objective to partner with our customer base and develop business opportunities for them and the consumer to all work together through this business cycle," he says.

"Sherwood Foods' customer base is optimistic that the economy will rebound—however, the uncertainty is when the recovery will be."

To remain ahead of the economic challenges, Ishbia adds that the slow economy has made the good retailers even better operators. "Consumer confidence was initially shattered at the uncertainty of the economy," he admits. "However, as the reality of the situation began to take shape, people adjusted to the conditions and have adapted their spending to reflect the poor economy. Most people are not predicting a great 2010 but are optimistic that the economy will be stable. If the economy improves, than it will be a pleasant surprise for everyone. If not, we will be prepared to handle it and be stronger competitors."

Pepsi's Mike Quinn says his company believes that things will improve a little bit overall in 2010 across the United States. "Within Michigan, our plans are slightly behind the rest of the country, but stabilizing," he adds.

Pepsi expects overall sales to be nearly flat in 2010, but the mix of products is changing to be more value oriented. "The consumer confidence question is still up in the air," says Quinn. "If job and housing markets improve, the consumer will become more optimistic."

Quinn says Pepsi's customers are telling them that consumers are watching everything very closely, with more planned purchases and less impulsiveness. "Our customers notice much slower foot traffic at end of each month," says Quinn. "The mix of products sold is moving to more single purchases and lower out-of-pocket dollar items. Providing strong value has never been more important, and it seems to change all the time."

Here is a summary of what the retail analysts are predicting for 2010, as well as some ideas on how AFPD members can capitalize on consumer trends.

Pent-Up Demand?

The dual trends of recessionary spending and growing online communities are reshaping shopper spending habits and changing the game for convenience store operators, according to speakers at CSP's 2009 Consumer Insights Forum in Phoenix.

According to Al Meyers, senior vice president of business development for Retail Forward, Columbus, Ohio, numbers are showing that shoppers are easing up on their penny-pinching ways. Addressing the group of about 75 retailers and suppliers, he said that post-recession consumers will still be making "mindful" choices, opting to remain frugal in ways they find meaningful.

In terms of economic trends and the effect the recession has had on shoppers, Meyers said last year's credit shock, Wall Street collapse, and housing implosion created a "perfect storm" that demoralized shopper psyches. Since then, the stabilization of the housing market and other factors are "starting to unlock" that freeze, and at least for several demographics, a release of pent-up demand is expected.

Retail Forward analysts are looking at 2010 as the start of the recovery, with 2013 seeing growth rates that the nation is more accustomed to.

In his concluding statements, Meyers focused on the boom of private brands, which mega-retailers such as Wal-Mart and 7-Eleven have embraced. He said companies are wisely choosing not to focus on private "label," which had the stigma of being a second-rate product, but private "brand." He said companies are investing in store brands, improving taste profiles, and giving personality to their brand identities.

Retail Forward’s most recent, monthly ShopperScape survey reported that while only nine percent of shoppers plan to increase their near-term spending compared with eight percent a year ago, the percentage of shoppers planning to curb their near-term spending declined from 53 percent in 45 percent year-to-year.

Extreme Savers: Down to a Science

According to a recent report in Supermarket News, Americans have finely tuned their smart shopping skills. Finding the best bargain has turned... into somewhat of a sport, and this new breed of “extreme savers” is not expected to go away in 2010.

For grocers trying to plan the best strategy for store circulars or advertising, consider this: Serious shoppers are getting a jump on the upcoming week by planning their strategy on Saturday nights. “What other explanation could there be for Walgreens consistently selling out of its Sunday papers one day in advance?” asked Dennis Belacastro, vice president of customer development and industry affairs for Kraft Foods at a recent Grocery Manufacturers Association’s Merchandising, Sales and Marketing Conference.

What started as a means for making ends meet for most has turned into a strategic game for some, as week after week savers try to beat their personal best. One Shaw’s Supermarket shopper featured on TV recently got more than $230 worth of groceries for a single penny, according to Supermarket News.

Other shoppers are making do with ingredients they’ve already got in their cupboards. Kraft Foods’ Laura Barry, vice president of consumer insight and shopper engagement, refers to the practice as “eating down the pantry.” What these meals lack in taste they often make up for in creativity — again, for the consumer, it’s all about saving money.

Kraft’s research shows that close to half (49 percent) of shoppers are engaging in the practice more now than they did just three months ago. Kraft has responded with ideas for five dinners that can be made with a single bag of groceries.

Other marketers are also keeping a close watch on these skillful shoppers, said the report. Many have even developed clever names for members of the consumer shopping crowd. “Shoptimizer” is the moniker Dial bestows on those who carefully devise their plan of attack before hitting the stores, according to Tracy VanBebber, senior vice president and CMO for customer solutions officer at the Dial Corp.

Behaviors are also category specific. Thirty-three percent of carbonated beverage consumers are the consumer shopping crowd. “Shoptimizer” is the moniker Dial bestows on those who carefully devise their plan of attack before hitting the stores, according to Tracy VanBebber, senior vice president and CMO for customer solutions officer at the Dial Corp.

The survey also found that consumers not only have changed their shopping habits, but these changes may be permanent for some. More than one-quarter (26 percent) say they have permanently changed the amount of money they spend while shopping and will not go back to spending as much as prior to the recession. One-third (33 percent) of consumers indicate that they have become less loyal to certain retailers, and 44 percent say they have remained loyal to stores they like, but make fewer trips or purchase less at them.

“Consumers have become much more cautious about their purchasing decisions, and these behaviors could have a lasting effect,” Janiaj said. “Consumers will not return to spending levels seen before the recession anytime soon, and high-volume discretionary purchasing could remain a thing of the past. As retailers shift gears for a recovery during the holiday season and beyond, they should consider seizing the opportunity to reinvigorate their brand and relevance to consumers who have embraced a new consumption mindset. That may include new marketing, pricing, and promotion strategies that focus on re-engaging the consumer and differentiating a retailer’s merchandise and services.”

Reviews have become another key online source of information, with nearly three-quarters of shoppers indicating they often read consumer-generated reviews of stores or products online.

The Internet also is changing the traditional store-based purchase process. Nearly half of consumers (48 percent) indicate they like the convenience of shopping with multichannel retailers, and more than three-quarters (78 percent) indicate they have purchased an item in a retailer’s store after viewing or researching the product on that same retailer’s website this year.

“Consumers are turning to mobile, online and social media during their entire shopping experience,” said Stacy Janiaj, vice chairman and Deloitte’s U.S. retail leader. “Retailers should consider harnessing this activity to turn browsers into buyers with one-click access to coupons, promotions, and purchasing tools.”

‘Engagement’ is the Pot of Gold in 2010

Brand Keys is a consulting firm that provides key insights for retailers to use in 2010. The following consumer trends may be helpful to c-stores, independent grocers, and other small businesses:

• Value is the new black. The idea here is that pretty much all consumer spending will be pegged to shoppers who have a compelling reason to buy. Authenticity in meeting those reasons will be the differential advantage.

• Increasingly, brands will be a surrogate for value. This makes sense, especially in view of the recent New York Times story about how traditional brands with a history of strong consumer connections are getting a lot of marketing push these days — there is a reassurance of value that consumers find comforting. Of course, this can also apply to retailer brands, especially in cases where the retailer has been aggressive about making those connections to the shopper.

• Consumer expectations are growing. Consumer aspirations have not gone away just because the economy tanked. Brands that figure out these aspirations — and unmet expectations — and then work to deliver on them will be the ones that have a leg up in the long run.

Finally, perhaps the hardest thing that brands will have to do in 2010 is understand that “buzz” is an antiquated concept, and that “engagement” is the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. That doesn’t just mean consumer engagement with the brand, however, though this clearly is important. It also means engagement with each other, and with the wide variety of media and communications vehicles that are at their fingertips 24 hours a day.

Brand Keys maintains that for a brand to succeed next year and beyond, they must be authentic, able to meet unmet and even unstated consumer needs and aspirations, and engage shoppers to enable a kind of conversation about the brand that will extend beyond the simple purchase and use of the product.
Retailers Provide Turkeys for 28,800 Thanksgiving Meals

29th Annual Foundation Turkey Drive of the Associated Food & Petroleum Dealers helped 2,400 needy families in the Metro Detroit area enjoy a better Thanksgiving. AFPD provided 2,400 families in the Metro Detroit area with turkeys for their Thanksgiving dinners, which equals approximately 28,800 meals (at 12 servings per turkey). In addition to the turkeys, Faygo Beverages donated one 2-liter bottle of soda to each family, and Tom’s Potato Chips donated a bag of chips.

“Many retailers and other local businesses have given generously to this program. This is one way our local independent retailers work together with the community to provide local needy families with a holiday meal,” says Jane Shallal, AFPD president and CEO. Turkeys were pre-packaged with the help of Student Council and National Honor Society students from Kettering High School in Detroit.

AFPD delivered turkeys to area churches and civic organizations, which then provided them to needy families. AFPD volunteers also assisted with giving turkeys directly to the recipients.

This is the 29th year that AFPD has provided needy families with turkeys for the holidays. Since 1980, the AFPD program has donated more than 48,000 turkeys for a total of approximately 576,000 meals.
AFPD warmly thanks these sponsors who provided goods and services to our 2009 Foundation Turkey Drive.

AFPD warmly thanks these companies for their donations toward our 2009 Foundation Turkey Drive. Your generosity is truly appreciated and will make a real difference in the lives of individuals and families in need.

Tips to keep your store In Compliance with COOL

Country of origin labeling (COOL) inspections are a concern to many AFPD members. “It is important for our retailers to know what is coming up with the Department of Agriculture’s inspections on COOL,” says Jane Shallal, AFPD president and CEO. “Many more inspections are going to be conducted.”

The Food Marketing Institute recently conducted tours of several grocery stores with a representative of the U.S. Department of Agriculture to discuss various country of origin labeling implementation issues. Here is a list of tips for AFPD members to consider regarding COOL.

• USDA will be conducting an additional 7,000 store inspections with FY’09 budget and will conduct 12,000 store inspections per year. These inspections will continue for as long as they receive the appropriations to do so.

• USDA is building a database that will allow greater transparency for retailers and greater data analysis for USDA. The system is under development now and expected to be available in the spring. Retailers will be able to access and track reports regarding their stores on line. The system will be secured to limit access. USDA is already using it to run reports to look for anomalous inspection results. For example, they noticed a spike of a particular type of finding in a particular state. Upon investigation, they found that the inspectors were misinterpreting a regulatory requirement and were able to correct the issue before it progressed.

• If you have a corporate contact and USDA has not recognized it, re-send the information to cool@ams.usda.gov.

• USDA is currently about 3-4 weeks behind in reviewing store inspection reports. Therefore, if you are aware that a store was inspected earlier than mid-September but have not received a follow-up letter from USDA, you may want to investigate.

• USDA will be conducting more training for state inspectors in January. Many inspectors were making mistakes in terms of covered commodities. Hopefully, additional training will help correct these problems. In addition, not all inspectors left the complete set of information at store level at the conclusion of the inspection; USDA agreed to send out a reminder on this point.

• USDA will reverse a “finding” if the retailer responds with sufficient evidence. For example, if you can explain to USDA that a particular covered commodity walk-out labeling was spoiled or damaged prior to September 30, 2008, USDA will remove the finding from your record.

• USDA did complete a survey to determine whether retailers were labeling meat products correctly. The labeling must include information on where the livestock was born, raised, and slaughtered. The results of the survey are awaiting approval for release.

• Find COOL info on YouTube. USDA’s YouTube COOL video should be available in December.

• What about frozen products packaged prior to September 30, 2008? Although USDA does not require these products to bear country of origin labeling, proving which products were produced prior to September 30, 2008 is still proving challenging to retailers. USDA cannot create a centralized list of these products. Fortunately, the problem does have an expiration date and at some point these products will be out of the distribution chain. In the interim, work with your suppliers and send information to USDA to document the true date of production to get any erroneous findings removed from your record.

• USDA’s interpretation of what constitutes “processing” for frozen potatoes is evolving. If the potatoes have been processed with only salt, sugar or amato, the agency does not consider them to be processed (so COOL applies). If the potatoes have been treated with oil or other substantive ingredients, the agency does consider them to be processed (so COOL does not apply). If you receive a letter indicating that your frozen potato products failed to display country of origin information, check the ingredient line on the package. If oil is in the ingredient line, tell USDA and the finding should be removed.

• Under the 2008 Farm Bill amendments to COOL requirements, state, region or locality can be used to identify the country of origin of covered products. Nuts, and ginseng. USDA’s final rule notes that some state production programs can be used to satisfy this requirement. However, not all such programs require that the product be produced entirely in the state. For example, according to USDA, the “Go Texan!” program can apply to products that are sourced from Mexico.

• State, local, and regional labeling is not sufficient for covered meat, poultry or fish items. Country of origin must be displayed.

• With the growing emphasis on locally grown products, more retailers are using the phrase to describe the origin of their products.

duce. USDA does not consider this phrase alone to be sufficient to satisfy the regulatory origin labeling requirements. However, indicating the farm or city and state along with “locally grown” will satisfy USDA. Also defining the term so consumers can understand (e.g., “within 100 miles of our store”) is also acceptable, provided that the area described does not cover more than one country.

- What is the allowed percentage of stickered produce items in a bulk bin? USDA can’t provide a definitive number. However, anything that looks about 50 percent stickered should be sufficient. If an inspector issues a “finding” for an insufficient number of PLU stickers, you could ask your store clerk to make an educated guess regarding the percentage of stickered in the bin and report that to USDA. If you can identify specific products using a bar code tab or peg tag or price tag labels, but the store doesn’t have a sufficient number to ensure that consumers can find the information. For example, one sign with all products and countries of origin at the far end of a meat counter would not be deemed sufficient in a meat department with a 30-foot server case and 50 more feet of self-service cases. Consider a separate sign for each covered commodity. If you choose to have one sign that lists all covered commodities and their countries of origin, consider posting it in multiple locations. Consider having one sign for every 20 feet of the meat case. USDA no longer considers it acceptable to post a sign indicating that your beef is from multiple countries unless you are actually receiving product from different countries and can document it properly. As much of the world supply today is labeled “product of the U.S.” do not post signs that state “product of U.S., Canada, Mexico” unless that is, in fact, the country of origin declaration provided by your supplier.

- Lot code numbers are still a mixed bag. Sometimes inspectors do not pick up lot numbers (e.g., frozen produce), while other times the inspectors insist on lot numbers and the information isn’t available (e.g., bulk produce). USDA will ask inspectors to pick up lot code numbers for packaged products, but remind them that lot code numbers usually are not available for bulk products.

- Peanuts, pecans, and macadamia nuts are all covered commodities that require origin labeling unless, of course, they are processed. Although heat may be applied to assist in shelling pecans or macadamia nuts, it is not sufficient to render the nuts “processed.” Roasted peanuts are not covered, but many packages don’t currently say whether the enclosed product is roasted or not. You may consider encouraging your suppliers to label roasted peanuts accordingly. If the products do not bear labeling and you receive notice from USDA, contact your supplier to find out whether or not the nuts were actually roasted (or otherwise processed). Reporting this information to USDA would be a sufficient basis to “remove” a finding.

- Cornish game hens are chickens. Therefore, they are subject to the country of origin labeling requirements.

- Packaged fresh herbs are covered commodities. Double check the herbs that you sell.

- Loose mushrooms require labeling. Again, check your stores.

Right to Repair Act Gaining Association Support

AFPD continues to monitor developments on the Motor Vehicle Owners' Right to Repair Act (HR 2057), which has gained steady support since its introduction in 2001. Five more members of Congress recently declared their support of the Motor Vehicle Owners' Right to Repair Act: Reps. Michael E. Capuano (D-MA), Christopher P. Carney (D-PA), Gregory W. Meeks (D-NY), Michael K. Conaway (R-TX) and Brad Miller (D-NC) are the most recent co-sponsors, bringing the number of sponsors to 45. The next step, according to Paul Fiore, executive vice president of the National Service Station Dealers Association (SSDA), involves a push to get Sen. Inhofe (R-OK) on board as lead Republican co-sponsor.

"We would like to have Sen. Inhofe sign on as the lead Republican co-sponsor," Fiore said, "because that would give the legislation bipartisan balance. To do this, the National Service Station Dealers Association, along with several other coalitions supporting the legislation, are working with their grass roots committees making phone calls to Sen. Inhofe's staff and trying to get an idea of what his relationship is with car dealerships," Fiore added. "Car dealerships, who are opposed to the bill, have large, well-funded Political Action Committees (PACs), and can place a great deal of pressure on legislators."

Introduced by Reps. Edolphus Towns (D-NY), Anna Eshoo (D-CA) and George Miller (D-CA), the Motor Vehicle Owners' Right to Repair Act would require car companies to make the same service information and tools capabilities available to independent repair shops that they provide to their franchised dealer networks. The legislation further provides car companies with strong protections for their trade secrets unless that information is provided to the franchised new car dealers. In addition, the bill clarifies the responsibilities of the Federal Trade Commission in enforcing it.

Because vehicles are becoming increasingly sophisticated with virtually every system either monitored or controlled by computers, servicing these vehicle systems to keep them in safe working condition requires ready access to complete and accurate information, tools and software from the car companies. The Right to Repair Act offers protections for motor vehicle owners by making it illegal for vehicle manufacturers to withhold information necessary to diagnose service or repair motor vehicles.

According to Kathleen Schmatz, president and CEO of the Automotive Aftermarket Industry Association (AAIA), a competitive marketplace backed by smart government oversight will protect American consumers and small businesses. Right to repair seeks to ensure that car owners continue to have a choice on where they have their vehicle repaired, whether it's an independently owned neighborhood repair shop or a new car dealership.

"While advances in technology have benefited consumers, it is critical that repairs shops have ready access to accurate information, tools and software needed to maintain and service late model vehicles. By requiring that car companies provide this information available, the Right to Repair Act ensures that motorists, and not the manufacturers, determine where, how and by whom they have their vehicles repaired," Schmatz added.

Other associations involved in the effort to get the legislation passed include the Coalition for Automobile Repair Equality (CARE), and the Tire Industry Association. "With lots of activity surrounding the issues of health care reform, and Cap and Trade legislation, we may or may not see developments in the short term," said Fiore. "Sometimes with many other pieces of legislation being debated, it's not a bad time to introduce new initiatives. We will continue to develop the best strategy to support the Right to Repair Act."

Understanding Merchant Credit Card Fees

Confused by credit card fees? You’re not alone.

Here is an introduction to understanding what you’re paying for and why.

By Aaron Press

For merchants accepting credit and debit cards at the point of sale, the list of fees and charges deducted from each transaction may seem long and difficult to fathom. Discount fees, interchange rates, and settlement charges can add up to a substantial amount of money deducted from each purchase, so it is important for merchants to understand what these fees represent, who is getting the money, and how the merchant benefits.

The system that facilitates payment processing involves several separate entities — cardholders, issuers, card associations, merchants, and acquirers. The interactions of these parties can number in the hundreds of millions each day. The interchange fee is what helps balance the costs of running the system and promotes a strong payments infrastructure. A strong payments industry benefits all participants, including merchants.

Interchange is the fee paid by merchants to payment card issuers for processing transactions, and represents the largest portion of a merchant’s total transaction processing costs. Card issuers are the individual banks that provide credit and debit cards to consumers. They are responsible for servicing individual accounts. Additional fees include monies paid to the card associations (Visa, MC, etc.) and to the merchant’s payment processor or acquirer.

Interchange is paid to credit card issuers to cover the cost of handling the transaction, maintaining infrastructure, and offsetting fraud or risk. That last item is especially important since it is the issuer who must absorb the loss from a fraudulent purchase, not the merchant. Interchange also funds research in security, network upgrades, and cardholder benefits. By promoting safe and stable payment methods, issuers give consumers access to an expansive and convenient payment network.

Interchange is priced as a percentage of the transaction. Pricing levels are classified by a number of parameters, such as the merchant type, whether a card is debit or credit, whether a card is a rewards card or business card, and the volume of card transactions processed by the merchant. Each of these classifications has certain requirements that must be met for a transaction to receive a particular rate. If a transaction does not fulfill one or more of the classification requirements, the transaction will “downgrade” to another classification, often with a higher rate, resulting in increased cost.

Avoiding these downgrades is an important way for merchants to manage their total cost of accepting payments.

In addition to interchange, the card brands also charge merchants a flat fee for every transaction called “dues and assessments.” While that may sound mysterious, these fees are retained by the card companies for use in maintaining the components of the network infrastructure, setting rules and regulations, research and development of new technologies, marketing, and branding.

While interchange and various card fees may seem puzzling, the benefits to merchants and consumers are real. The largest benefit is that merchants are able to offer a broad range of electronic payment options for their customers. For consumers, that means more convenience and choice on how they want to manage their expenses. For the merchant, consumer convenience and choice means higher sales.

Additionally, the settlement of transactions through the interchange network is fast, secure, and reliable. This eliminates the expenses involved in handling accounts receivables and the risks involved with cash and checks. For the merchant, that means lower costs.

In the end, the ability to accept credit and debit cards is a necessity. Consumers now expect their grocers, dry cleaners, and convenience stores to accept cards. The fees make it possible for consumers and merchants to share the costs of keeping the system working smoothly.

Aaron Press is director, market strategy, for Chase Paymentech.

It is important for merchants to understand what these fees represent, who is getting the money, and how the merchant benefits.
U.S Newspaper Circulation Continues Decline

U.S. newspaper circulation continues to decline, according to recent figures from the Audit Bureau of Circulations. From April to September, average daily circulation decreased 10.6 percent over the same six months in 2008. That is more than the 7.1 percent reduction in the October 2008 to March 2009 period and the 4.6 percent fall in the April to September 2008 period. Sunday circulation declined 7.5 percent over the last six months.

The Wall Street Journal edged out USA Today as the top-selling newspaper in the country, growing 0.6 percent — the only daily newspaper in the top 25 to do so. Meanwhile, USA Today had its worst period ever, falling more than 17 percent.

The New York Times retained its third place ranking, but its numbers were 7.3 percent lower than the same period a year ago. Sales of newspaper have been on a downward trend for almost two decades, but that decline has quickened recently.

Justice Dept. to Investigate Walmart, Target, Amazon

The American Booksellers Association (ABA), which represents independent booksellers, has asked Assistant Attorney General Varney to require the Department of Justice to investigate anticompetitive and predatory pricing actions by Walmart, Target, and Amazon.com in the sale of major bestseller book releases that are being sold significantly below their costs. Recent media reports by MarketWatch.com and Bloomberg have also highlighted Walmart's holiday pricing on items ranging from toys to electronics in an effort to lure 'hoppers during this tough economic climate. The retailer has also launched a nationwide price cut on bananas ($0.19) and tubes of lean ground beef ($1.25) in an effort to attract additional traffic.

The ABA got upset because Walmart, Target, and Amazon are selling national bestseller books that typically retail for $25 and $35 at $8.98 and $9.99, which ABA contends is far below their costs. "We believe that Amazon.com, Walmart, and Target are using these predatory pricing practices to attempt to win control of the market for hardcover bestsellers," wrote the ABA.

Michigan Instant Lottery Ticket Security

In today's economic atmosphere, lottery retailers must initiate and employ security measures to address their exposure to theft of instant lottery tickets. All instant tickets have individual serial numbers printed on them. Set up your shift and end-of-day cashier reports with spaces for recording instant ticket serial numbers. By recording the instant ticket serial numbers, you have a very good chance of recovering the value of the stolen tickets, and authorities have a better than average opportunity of catching the crook, if he tries to cash any winning tickets acquired from your store.

In Michigan, a lottery retailer is responsible for all tickets consigned to him or her. Here are the basic rules:

- The retailer shall pay for the stolen tickets on the settlement date.
- The retailer shall subsequently file a statement swearing to or affirming, under the penalty of perjury, the facts of the case.
- The retailer shall furnish to the bureau a copy of the police report covering the theft.

Following an investigation by the bureau and police authorities, the bureau may issue a refund to the retailer. Refunds may only be issued if losses to the bureau have been mitigated by a retailer's actions in reporting the tickets stolen and the retailer's appropriate accounting of the tickets stolen.

Keep in mind that if you have recorded serial numbers, and promptly report the theft to the lottery commission, you have a very good chance to recover your loss.

Contractors who don’t take safety seriously can expose your employees, customers, and facility to unwanted hazards.

Protect Your People When Contractors are Onsite

Bringing outside contractors into your business facility can put your employees and customers at risk. Contractors who don’t take safety seriously can expose your employees, customers, and facility to unwanted hazards. Therefore, take the initiative to evaluate the contractor’s safety programs and how they implement them. It is also important to recognize that all employers have the same duty to comply with OSHA standards and eliminate hazardous conditions.

Here are some things you can do to protect yourself, your employees and customers when working with contractors:

- Clearly define your expectations and their responsibilities.
- Determine how these responsibilities are viewed from the OSHA perspective.
- Ensure that their staff is trained to recognize health and safety hazards applicable to your facility.
- Assign Health and Safety responsibilities to one of your own employees for each project.
- Provide that person with resources to carry out his/her responsibility.
- Make sure the contractor has a written Health and Safety Plan.
- Know the history of the contractors you are working with.

Accomplishing these items before a contractor steps foot on your business property is a proactive approach to worksite health and safety. You will be better prepared to address hazards and prevent serious incidents from happening.

Taking these steps will also help in dealing with an OSHA inspector should one happen to visit your business. For help on establishing safety practices at your business, contact Frank Gates at (800) 777-4283.
CALL FOR INDUSTRY ARTIFACTS

In commemoration of the 100th Year Anniversary of the Associated Food and Petroleum Dealers, the AFPD is putting together a centennial exhibition. We value our relationship with you and are very excited to be celebrating our 100 year anniversary, as you have been with us throughout these years.

The AFPD is calling on industry colleagues who have historical materials and memorabilia relating to the food, beverage and petroleum industry from 1910 to the present for the purpose of display in this centennial exhibition which will be shown at the AFPD 100th Anniversary Trade Dinner on Friday, February 12, 2010 at Rock Financial Diamond Center.

We are endeavoring to include items such as letters, photographs, films, artifacts, memorabilia and other special pieces relating to the food, beverage and petroleum industries in this collection. This collection will seek to display industry history in one place. You can help round out the exhibit by considering showing your artifacts. All retailers, manufacturers and suppliers are encouraged to participate in this special exhibition and we welcome your participation.

Security of the artifacts on display is a top concern for AFPD and protection of items is assured before, during and after the exhibition.

If you wish to showcase your product or memorabilia, please contact Jane Shallal or Lauren Kopitz at (800) 666-6233 or visit www.AFPDonline.org.
More Retailers Urging Use of Reusable Bags
Retailers are ramping up efforts to get consumers to bring reusable bags to pack their purchases. Some recent developments:
* Target is offering customers a 5-cent discount for every reusable bag they use.
* CVS is giving customers $1 cash bonuses on their CVS cards every four times they buy something but don’t request plastic bags.

The Target program, which rolls out on Nov. 1 at all 1,700 Target stores across the country, could save billions of plastic bags. A recent report in USA Today states that Target posts more than 1.5 billion transactions annually — most ending up in more than one bag. In fact, a pilot test in 100 Target stores earlier this year resulted in an impressive 58 percent reduction in plastic bags used.

The CVS program is rolling out to 7,000 stores and requires customers to buy a 99-cent tag to be scanned with their CVS card.

Following the examples set by smaller retailers like Whole Foods, Trader Joe's, and Stop & Shop—who have all given consumers financial incentives to re-use bags—USA Today speculates that reusable bags are being more mainstream at a time when retailers are feeling heat from advocacy groups, lawmakers, and customers to take action on environmental issues. Just the Target and CVS programs alone could keep billions of plastic bags out of the environment, says Allen Herskowitz, senior scientist at the National Resources Defense Council.

"It’s become part of the competitive landscape to demonstrate that it’s part of your culture," David Szymanski, marketing professor at Texas A&M University, told the newspaper. "Retailers who want to connect with this generation have to go green."

Lawmakers Battle to Restrict E-Cigarettes
Despite concerns by public health officials, electronic cigarettes are gaining ground in the United States, USA Today reports. The battery-powered device uses nicotine, flavoring and chemicals in a cartridge, which turns the nicotine into a vapor to be inhaled by the user.

State and local lawmakers are considering ways to restrict the smokeless product, which some use to get around smoking bans. The Electronic Cigarette Association (ECA) says at least 300,000 Americans use e-cigarettes.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) tested e-cigarettes and found the devices to have carcinogens. In a lawsuit, electronic cigarette distributors are challenging the FDA’s authority to regulate the products.

Across the country, several states are trying to restrict access to the products. Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal says his state is “actively investigating these companies and their products.” California banned the sale of e-cigarettes but Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger vetoed the bill.

In Oregon, the state attorney general reached an agreement with retailers and distributors to keep the products off shelves.

A New Hampshire state representative is proposing a bill to make it illegal to sell the devices to minors, while in New Jersey, an assemblywoman will be submitting a bill to put e-cigarettes under the same restrictions as cigarettes.

Save-A-Lot Plans to Double Total Stores Over Five Years
Supervalu Inc.’s Craig Herkert recently announced plans to double the size of the company’s grocer’s discount chain Save-A-Lot to about 2,400 stores over five years.

Supervalu’s main business will remain its chain of traditional supermarkets, including Albertson’s, Jewel-Osco and Farm Fresh. Save-A-Lot’s 1,180 stores sell a limited number of items, mostly private label, at lower prices every day versus a discount model used by traditional grocers.

Supervalu has struggled since it acquired more than 1,100 Albertson’s stores in 2006. Analysts say that a more centralized purchasing structure for the chain’s 2,500 stores and the 1,800 supermarkets it supplies as a wholesaler should drive down everyday prices of national-branded items. Supervalu’s plan to expand its Save-A-Lot store base is a push to soften the blow of future economic recessions and cater to what it believes will be a long-term trend toward thriftiness by many customers. Part of Herkert’s strategy and long-term vision includes putting the Save-A-Lot stores (about 75 percent of which are franchised to licensees) in neighborhoods where they will compete with pricier traditional grocery stores.

A typical Save-A-Lot stocks about 3,000 frequently purchased items — less than 10 percent of the items found at a conventional supermarket — and serves a household with annual earnings below $45,000.

Flavors of the Season
It may not be hot outside anymore, but that doesn’t stop our love affair with ice cream. Especially when manufacturers come up with flavors for the season.

For example, Ben and Jerry’s launched a flavor called “Gingersnap,” a blend of brown sugar cinnamon ice cream, gingersnap cookies, and ginger caramel swirl. “Peppermint Bark” is always a seasonal favorite from Haagen-Dazs, featuring a creamy vanilla base with chunks of peppermint bark.

Farmer Joe’s Market Place has a mild vanilla ice cream to serve with holiday pie. The runner up, Edy’s “Slow Churned Vanilla Bean,” is surprisingly low in fat.

Mango’s Fruit Market: The Little Guy Prevails

By Carla Kalogeridis

Eddie Daibess was more than a little bit nervous when he sunk his buyout from Ford Motor Co. and his entire life savings into a fruit, produce, deli, and meat market in Canton two years ago. After working 33 years on the assembly line at Ford, Daibess knew two things: He was too young to retire, and he wanted to leave his children with a business that could bring them security for the future.

“I maxed out every credit card, and literally put every penny I had into this place,” Daibess says. “We launched the business right when the economy started to have problems. It was scary, but I put my hopes in God’s hands.”

And Daibess is quick to add that God has come through for him — with a little help from AFPD.

It turns out that AFPD’s chairman of the board, Chris Zebari, lives in the same neighborhood as Mango’s Fruit Market. When Zebari saw the Mango’s sign go up on the corner storefront just a short distance from his home, he stopped and introduced himself. A salesman for Lipari Foods, Zebari recognized immediately that Daibess had many good ideas but that he needed some support.

Although Daibess had worked a brief, part-time stint as a breakfast chef at a Middle Eastern restaurant in the early 1970s, that was the extent of his experience in the food industry. And having put everything he had into getting the store ready, he had to open on a shoestring.

Daibess and his three sons work the business: Haas (age 27), Mike (age 22), and Joe (age 19). A week or so before the store’s grand opening, Hass Daibess remembers asking Zebari: “Can you sell us just one stick of salami, one roast beef, and one balo...”

“Every time we’ve had a question about our business or one of the AFPD programs, someone has come out to the store in person to help us. There are so many ways to save money through AFPD. We’ve been able to save a lot of money with the Nestle and insurance programs, and we’ve also learned quite a bit from AFPD about food safety and about the beer and wine business.”

“This is the story of a family that took everything it had and invested in the neighborhood, and the neighborhood supported them.”

Mike Daibess, Eddie Daibess, Hass Daibess, and Chris Zebari

Haas Daibess, who worked at Westborn Market before joining his father at Mango’s. “It’s important to stay open to new ideas.”

One reason the store is thriving, says Zebari, is that the Daibess father and sons have not been afraid of change and trying new things. “They’ve tried 1,200 different items on the shelves,” he says. “Some have moved. Some haven’t.” Today, the deli is the staple of the store. In fact, Mango’s just added a sub shop and now offers catering services.

Nevertheless, Eddie Daibess admits that the store is still having some ups and downs. “Someone told me that in this economy, if you are paying the bills, you’re blessed,” he says. “So I don’t worry about it so much anymore.”

Hass Daibess has been particularly impressed with AFPD’s help along the way. “AFPD is an organization for the little guy,” he says. “Every time we’ve had a question about our business or one of the AFPD programs, someone has come out to the store in person to help us. There are so many ways to save money through AFPD. We’ve been able to save a lot of money with the Nestle and insurance programs, and we’ve also learned quite a bit from AFPD about food safety and about the beer and wine business.”

“Chris is our guardian angel,” says Daibess. “We would not still be here without him. “Eddie was smart — he picked a great location, right in the middle of 10,000 homes,” says Zebari. “People can get in and out of here real quick, and the prices are lower than the local Meijer’s and Kroger’s. People like to support the little guy. And everyone loves the neighborhood feel of the store and the freshness of the fruits, produce, and meats. Eddie just needed a little extra help to get going.”

Zebari says Daibess and his sons learned the business quickly. “We continue to learn each day,” says Eddie. Between July and December of 2007, Zebari stopped and introduced himself. A salesman for Lipari Foods, Zebari recognized immediately that Daibess had many good ideas but that he needed some support.

Although Daibess had worked a brief, part-time stint as a breakfast chef at a Middle Eastern restaurant in the early 1970s, that was the extent of his experience in the food industry. And having put everything he had into getting the store ready, he had to open on a shoestring.

Daibess and his three sons work the business: Haas (age 27), Mike (age 22), and Joe (age 19). A week or so before the store’s grand opening, Hass Daibess remembers asking Zebari: “Can you sell us just one stick of salami, one roast beef, and one balo...”

“Every time we’ve had a question about our business or one of the AFPD programs, someone has come out to the store in person to help us. There are so many ways to save money through AFPD. We’ve been able to save a lot of money with the Nestle and insurance programs, and we’ve also learned quite a bit from AFPD about food safety and about the beer and wine business.”

“This is the story of a family that took everything it had and invested in the neighborhood, and the neighborhood supported them.”

“One reason the store is thriving, says Zebari, is that the Daibess father and sons have not been afraid of change and trying new things. “They’ve tried 1,200 different items on the shelves,” he says. “Some have moved. Some haven’t.” Today, the deli is the staple of the store. In fact, Mango’s just added a sub shop and now offers catering services.

Nevertheless, Eddie Daibess admits that the store is still having some ups and downs. “Someone told me that in this economy, if you are paying the bills, you’re blessed,” he says. “So I don’t worry about it so much anymore.”

Hass Daibess has been particularly impressed with AFPD’s help along the way. “AFPD is an organization for the little guy,” he says. “Every time we’ve had a question about our business or one of the AFPD programs, someone has come out to the store in person to help us. There are so many ways to save money through AFPD. We’ve been able to save a lot of money with the Nestle and insurance programs, and we’ve also learned quite a bit from AFPD about food safety and about the beer and wine business.”

People like to support the little guy. And everyone loves the neighborhood feel of the store and the freshness of the fruits, produce, and meats. Eddie just needed a little extra help to get going.”

Zebari says Daibess and his sons learned the business quickly. “We continue to learn each day,” says Eddie.

Exciting Changes
and Holiday Games

It's been an exciting whirlwind of activity and improvements at The Ohio Lottery recently. During my past two months as lottery director, I can say it's been both a privilege and an honor to have the opportunity to manage a $2 billion per year organization like The Ohio Lottery. The work we do on behalf of public education — providing real benefits to Ohio children and communities — is important and admirable. Last year alone, we raised $702.3 million for The Lottery Profits Education Fund and provided an economic boost to more than 9,200 retailers state-wide.

Holiday Sales

We've just begun this most important holiday retail season. Lottery staff members representing many different departments have collaborated to provide a vast array of holiday games to meet customer demands.

Some of our newer, more innovative holiday promotions are the EZ PLAY Holiday Games, which include the $2 Stacking Stuffer and the $1 Reindeer Rally. Other themed Instant Games include the $10 Holiday Winnings, the $5 Holiday Lucky Times, the $2 Jingle Bell Doubler, and the $1 Holiday Cash game.

In addition, The Ohio Lottery is pleased to announce the return of the favorite New Year's Raffle. It's a terrific and festive holiday game, which went on sale November 20. With only 500,000 tickets printed and odds of 1 in 125,000 of winning the $1 million jackpot, it's one of the holiday's best-kept secrets.

Retailer-Focused Improvements

The Ohio Lottery staff is continually looking at ways to enhance procedures that benefit its retailers and save valuable business time. Since the conversion to the new gaming system (effective July 1), retailers have asked for ways to account for sales and cashes that represent their true "business day" which sometimes spills over from one day to the next. We've created a new financial report to address that situation.

On behalf of The Ohio Lottery, I wish you, your employees, and families a safe and secure holiday season.

Kathleen Burke is director of The Ohio Lottery.

The first installment of the Lottery’s game show, Make Me Rich!, debuted on October 16 with resounding success. During the half-hour game show, $4 million in prize money and a 2010 Ford Mustang GT were given away. The second show airs in February 2010 and will once again be hosted by former Brady Bunch TV co-star Christopher Knight.

Players can win a chance to appear in the February episode of “Make Me Rich!” by playing a variety of instant tickets from the Michigan Lottery, including the $10 Million Dollar Mega Play and Holiday Riches games and most of the current $20 games. Details on how to enter drawings for the show can be found at www.michigan.gov/lottery. As with the first broadcast, the February edition of “Make Me Rich!” will feature a text-to-win component for the viewing audience. During the show, details on how to win one of five $1,000 prizes will be announced.

Here are some “Make Me Rich!” game highlights:

- $20 Instant Games: If a player claims a $1,000 prize from Multi Millions™ Casino Royale™, $2,000,000 Diamond Dazzler™, Lucky Game Book™, or $2,000,000 Club™, they will be automatically entered into a drawing to become a finalist. Players must file their $1,000 claim by Wednesday, December 9, to be eligible for the drawing for the February broadcast. The finalist drawing will be conducted on Friday, December 11. And four lucky players will be selected to appear on Make Me Rich! for a chance to win $2,000,000.

- Million Dollar Mega Play: When players claim a $1,000 prize from Million Dollar Mega Play™ (game #322), they will be automatically entered into the final drawing scheduled for Friday, December 11. During the drawing, three finalists will be selected to appear on the game show for a chance to win $1,000,000. Players must file their $1,000 claims by Wednesday, December 9.

- Holiday Riches: When players claim a $750 prize from Holiday Riches™, one of the Lottery’s newest holiday instant tickets that went on sale in November, they will automatically be entered into the finalist drawing scheduled for Wednesday, January 6, 2010. Three finalists will be selected to appear on the show’s broadcast for the chance to win $500,000. Players have until Monday, January 4, 2010, to claim their prize and be entered into the finalist drawing.

By having tickets available for players to purchase and promoting second-chance drawings, retailers played a large part in making the first episode of Make Me Rich! the huge success it was. We look forward to a successful second installment of the show.

Millionaire Raffle

Millionaire Raffle tickets went on sale November 9, and the game promises to be a hit with players because of its new second-chance opportunity to win additional cash prizes. Players will have eight opportunities to win an additional $25,000 prize. To enter the Millionaire Raffle, second chance sweepstakes bonus drawing, players must submit one Millionaire Raffle ticket online at the Lottery’s VIP player website, www.playercity.net. Only Millionaire Raffle tickets sold for the January 6 drawing are eligible for entry, and players can enter as many times as they wish.

Drawings for the second chance prizes began on November 18 and will continue to January 6. Each drawing will award one winner a $25,000 prize. Specific details regarding the drawings and deadlines for ticket entry can be found at www.playercity.net.

Like previous Millionaire Raffles, 600,000 tickets will be sold, each with a unique raffle number. The drawing will be conducted on or after January 6 when 6,018 winning raffle numbers will be selected. The first six raffle numbers drawn will be awarded prizes worth $1,000,000 each; the next 12 will be awarded prizes worth $500,000 each; the following 2,000 will be awarded prizes worth $1,000 each; and the last 4,000 selected will be awarded prizes worth $500 each.

Make sure you tell customers to hold on to their tickets; they must present the original raffle ticket to Lottery officials if they win. Millionaire Raffle tickets are available at all Lottery and Club Keno locations.

New Study Shows What Drives Shoppers into a Store

Shopper marketing continues to grow in importance for CPGs and retailers, but its effectiveness is being limited by insufficient integration with out-of-store marketing and media channels, according to a new study from The Gomery Manufacturers Association, Booz & Company, and SheSpeaks.

"Shopper Marketing 3.0" involved a comprehensive survey of 3,600 shoppers across the food and beverage, household products, and health and beauty categories, and across multiple retail formats. In addition to filling out pre- and post-shopping surveys, shoppers participated in online forums.

The researchers also interviewed 25 senior executives from leading shopper marketing agencies, CPG manufacturers across categories, retailers across formats, measurement and analytics firms, and in-store media service providers.

Overall investment in shopper marketing — defined by the Marketing Leadership Council as in-store advertising, promotion and design initiatives intended to extend brand equity and provide the retailer with differentiation — is estimated to be growing at 21 percent annually, according to hardknoklife.com.

However, this new study concludes that CPG manufacturers have yet to align shopper marketing initiatives with the advertising and promotions that reach consumers at home and on the go. That results in disconnected marketing messages, wasted spending and missed opportunities to drive purchases.

Integrating and quantifying results from shopper marketing is becoming even more critical. Retailers increasingly seek to tap into CPGs' budgets beyond trade promotions, pushing manufacturers to shift spending into ads on retailer websites and in-store video networks, as well as participate in retailer database marketing programs, GMA and Booz point out.

The surveys probed the factors that drive consumer purchases in the store, including the relative influences of in-store and out-of-store marketing.

Even with the documented growth in private-label buying, this study found brand preference to be the most important out-of-store factor influencing which products go on a shopping list. More than two-thirds (68 percent) of shoppers ranked "long-standing brand preferences" as a 4 or a 5, with 5 signifying "very influential." Nearly half (48 percent) gave coupons one of these top two rankings, and 51 percent gave friends/family the top rankings. Advertising and media content were given top rankings by just 19 percent and 16 percent, respectively.

The study also found that nearly half of food and beverage shoppers and nearly 60 percent of health/beauty and household goods shoppers purchase their preferred brands even when a less expensive alternative is available. Many — 48 percent of food and beverage shoppers, 58 percent of household product shoppers and 59 percent of health and beauty shoppers — use coupons or price promotions to "justify buying the brands they want" rather than as the key factor driving their decision making, the researchers report. Other key findings:

- Shoppers choose 59 percent of the brands they buy in the store, and 41 percent before they enter the store. This points to opportunities to influence their brand choices before they go shopping.

- For the 59 percent of items for which brands are selected in-store, 85 percent of shoppers perceive in-store factors as more influential than out-of-store marketing. After price, communicating benefits on packaging is most influential, whether for reinforcing existing brand preferences, driving competitive switching, capturing purchase when there is no strong brand preference, or creating impulse sales.

While confirming that most shoppers (81 percent) do research before shopping, this study — unlike some other recent consumer surveys — found that 77 percent of shoppers do not take detailed shopping lists into the store. Instead, most shoppers have "mental lists" that include "brand consideration sets," but evolve as they are exposed to more marketing at home, in transit, and in the store.

Perishables Win Out in the Recession

New research from Nielsen shows that a grocery store's perishable departments - the bakery, fresh meat, deli and produce that line the perimeter - are becoming more productive as consumers become used to eating out less, and focus more on the quality of the meals they prepare at home.

With 36 percent of consumers saying that their families eat out less often, value-priced meals at retail are posting double digit increases. Eating at home has been a common theme during this recession, but this new research shows the surprising high movement of foods sold on the store's perimeter.

Among the many consumers who have cut down on dining out, there's been a much greater awareness of what's for dinner, says the Nielsen research; consumers are spending about 6 percent more in supermarkets and supercenters as a result Food Network viewership is going through the roof, and online food research is up dramatically. Smart retailers are taking advantage of this new what-to-serve anxiety, with chains like Meijer and Whole Foods Market offering food planning content through iPhones. However, these shoppers are still focused on getting convenient food at a good price: Nielsen finds that 51 percent of meat and seafood is purchased when it's on sale, and 41 percent of shoppers notice those prices in store circulars. And while supercenters and warehouse clubs have made a concerted effort to beef up their perishables, supermarkets are still stronger, with a 70 percent market share of meat and seafood, and 50 percent of deli business.

Is H1N1 Responsible for Boom in Orange Juice Sales?

Industry analysts are suggesting that the swine flu may be partly responsible for the rising retail sales of orange juice over the last six months.

Consumers, it seems, are doing just about anything to ward off H1N1, and drinking extra servings of orange juice is just the kind of home remedy they are willing to try.

Unfortunately, the Florida Department of Agriculture projects that Florida's orange juice industry will produce 16 percent less juice in the 2009-10 year compared to 2008-09. Apparently, cooler weather, drought, and citrus disease are the culprits.

In the world of prescription drugs, there is a fine line — if any at all — between brand name and Food and Drug Administration (FDA)-approved generic drugs. For all intents and purposes, both are one in the same, except for one major difference: price.

The average price of a brand-name prescription is $96.01, while the average generic prescription costs $28.74, according to Tim Antonelli, a registered pharmacist and clinical program manager for Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan (BCBSM). Antonelli recently shared this alarming statistic with the U.S. Congress.

One of the biggest misconceptions Americans have about prescription drugs is that brand-name drugs offer an added benefit and are better in quality than their generic counterparts. Not true, according to the FDA's Center for Drug Evaluation and Research website, which says, "A generic drug is a copy that is the same as a brand-name drug in dosage, safety, strength, how it is taken, quality, performance and intended use."

One reason generic drug makers can sell their products at a lesser price than their brand-name medicine company counterparts is that generic drug manufacturers don't have the same development and marketing costs. "If you have a drug that loses its patent and there is an equivalent, if I were in practice today, I would customarily write for the generic equivalent in all circumstances," said Barbara Menzies, M.D., executive medical director of medical and benefit policy for BCBSM. "That's how much confidence I have in generic drugs."

BCBSM has promoted the use of generic prescription drugs since 2001, when it launched an awareness campaign dubbed, "Generic Drugs: The Unadvertised Brand." BCBSM created a website, www.theunadvertisedbrand.com, to inform the public about the tremendous upside of generic drugs.

"Since that time, our members' use of generic prescription drugs has increased from 37.7 percent of total prescriptions to more than 52 percent," Antonelli said during his Congressional testimony. "As a result of this increase over the past five years, we estimate that BCBSM members have saved more than $45 million in out-of-pocket costs, due to lower payments."

If your company has prescription drug coverage, be sure to promote the use of generic drugs to your workforce through informative announcements, newsletters, e-mails and other communication tools.

Welcome to the AFPD 93rd Annual Trade Dinner & Ball 2009
Our Mission

As the “Voice for the food, beverage and petroleum industry” since 1910, AFPD is a multi-state trade association representing 9,000 retailers operating in Michigan and Ohio. Our members include independent supermarkets, convenience stores, service stations, and auto repair businesses. Our membership also includes wholesalers, distributors and manufacturers who support the retail industry.

AFPD is recognized as a leader in government and industry relations and closely monitors proposed state and federal legislation and how it will affect member retail businesses. Any proposed legislation that will have an adverse impact to food, beverage and petroleum retailers is met with AFPD’s strong lobbying efforts. Any positive proposed legislation is supported and advocated.

AFPD has made it a priority to help state retailers work to comply with all state, federal and local regulations. AFPD has worked very hard to establish a rapport with the departments and agencies with whom state retailers communicate on a regular basis. Acting as a liaison to these departments and agencies, AFPD can often times find the answers to retailer questions and conversely help to educate retailers on guidelines and regulations that affect them.
